Are You One Who's Wondered?

ERHAPS you are among the hundreds of automobile enthusiasts—owners, drivers or just "lookers on"—who have wondered what The White Company would do were it to produce a six-cylinder car. Probably you've come to have a splendid respect for any car The White Company might produce as you have watched their models year after year since the automobile industry began. Perhaps you are prejudiced, but it's such a splendid prejudice, reaching back over years of actual performance, during which the name of "White" stood as a bulwark for reliability and thorough building. If you had this curiosity, to-day we are ready to satisfy it—in a six-cylinder "White."

It's hardly necessary to tell you the details of this car. The highest engineering authorities in the gasoline-engine world have reached very definite conclusions, and any car designed to-day would imitate closely the mechanical features of this six-cylinder "White."

The Simplest "Six"—The White

F course we take considerable pride in telling you that it's built on the same identical lines as our "30's" and "40's"—it has the same marvelous simplicity which tells more than any word description of ours—that practically total absence of the paraphernalia that litter most engines, especially the more powerful types. Regarding the details of finish, body lines and equipment, The White Company would not be outdone. This six-cylinder "60" White is all a car should be in these respects—possibly just a little more—because it has the advantage of being produced to-day instead of yesterday. Built as we like to build motor cars, there is only a limited number of these cars to be produced this season. They're going pretty rapidly, order after order having been filled without even a photograph, a blue-print or a car to show. This isn't a cry of "wolf," but just a plain statement to our friends—to those who want this highest expression of an automobile as interpreted by the great White factory. We would not disappoint you if we could help it—you can help it by getting your appointment for a demonstration early.

Appointments for demonstrations in all principal cities on or after January first.

A Milliner Who Decided to Concentrate and Advertise

MISS KATHERINE E. HENESEY has advertised in the "Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide" for the past four years.

Her specialty is mourning millinery.

For ten years Miss Henesey had a general millinery shop at 286 Fifth Avenue. Four years ago she moved uptown to her present address at 424 Fifth Avenue, where she opened with a large assortment of imported mourning millinery. There is a great difference between selling hats and veils for general wear, and hats and veils for mourning. The necessity for mourning comes quickly and must be satisfied quickly. Miss Henesey knew that she must keep in stock a very large and comprehensive assortment of mourning hats and veils.

With her new shop and her new stock, Miss Henesey decided to advertise. She selected Vogue because she felt that only Vogue could bring her the class of patrons she wanted.

To-day Miss Henesey has the largest collection of mourning millinery in New York—probably the largest in America. Her experiment of concentrating her business in one department has proved a striking success. And she gives Vogue credit for bringing her many of the patrons who have made her good fortune.

After four years in the "Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide," Miss Henesey writes:

January 6, 1912.

Manager "Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide," Vogue, New York.

Dear Sir:—

Vogue brings customers. There is no doubt of that. My little advertisement in the "Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide" has acted like a magnet in drawing out from the public just those women whom I most wanted for patrons.

Often I have to advise my patrons on various details of their mourning—not only the hat and veil but the rest of the costume, and the conventions of the mourning period. Vogue has brought me women whom it is a pleasure to advise and assist. And not merely a few of these women but a great many of them every year since my advertisement started.

With sincere good wishes for the continued success of Vogue, I am > Very truly yours, KATHERINE E. HENESEY.

The February 15th Vogue Will Be The Forecast of Spring Fashions Number

THE newest things in the Spring mode will be described and pictured in the next Vogue.

For many weeks our foreign representatives

—"war correspondents"—have been busy in Paris and London collecting advance news of the fashions for our Forecast of Spring Fashions Number. On this side of the water our editors have been making notes and sketches in the showrooms of New York's leading importers and designers.

Every detail of fashionable Spring attire will thus receive attention in the next Vogue—advanced gowns, spring-like hats and bonnets, dainty lingerie and hosiery, smart shoes, and the latest conceits in all the dress accessories that mean so much to her who studies her appearance.

The greatest English authority of the day on laces, Mr. Milton Abelson, contributes a special article to the next Vogue, describing some of his latest reproductions of classical laces.

The Forecast of Spring Fashions Number is the first in our 1912 Spring Programme. You will need it. An order to your newsdealer now may prevent vexatious delays later on. Or, fill in and mail the accompanying coupon and receive with certainty and promptness our four forthcoming Spring numbers.

THE CONFÉRENCE A FRAME FOR MODES PARISIAN

The Conférence, Usurping the Afternoon Tea, Delights Paris With the Quintessence of

ROM five to seven are the hours of Parisian social activity. Whether these hours be spent in a smart tea room or at a still smarter conférence, the framing is similar—tall green palms shading secluded corners, fresh flowers the odors of which mingle with latest perfumes from Lentheric, subdued lights, and sweet music adapted to the ceaseless hum of conversation. At the conférence, to attend which this year marks the dernier cri of elegance, the music and snatches of conversation of the tea room are replaced by the witticisms of the conférencier and of those who succeed him on the little stage; for, be it known, it is not for instruction the mondaine gives up her acquired love for afternoon tea. However famous the conférencier, the shortest space of time is devoted to his talk; actresses from the great theatres, famous for their beauty and gowning, great singers from the opera, and favorite comedians from the last Revue, all aim to amuse, to satisfy the desire to laugh that, with the popularity of the Revue, has seized all Paris.

The smartest playhouses are given up to the Revue. In the Revue Sans-Gêne, written by MM. Rip and Bousquet, Madame Réjane has made her début. It is easy for her admirers to picture to themselves the drolleries of her acting, her expression and her voice, and how wonderfully she transforms herself from one laughable silhouette to another.

GOWNS AT ONE OF THE NEW, DELIGHTSOME REVUES

Among the marvelous toilettes displayed on the stage the night of her première, a Drécoll gown worn by Mlle. Marnac stands out preëminent. Of pale rose crêpe de Chine embroidered in shining crystal tubes, the skirt, mounted above the waist-line to form a high girdle, opened at one side over a fourreau of black tulle embroidered with crystal fringe, woven, after the new manner, into the material. Above the top of this rosy cloud the corsage was merely an unlined guimp of black mousseline de soie. At the top edge of the embroidered girdle was posed an immense bow of black tulle clasped by a diamond bar. The effect of this black bow in conjunction with the line of semi-transparent black in the skirt opening was delightful. This accent of black, repeated in an extremely high Directoire stock collar of black velvet, proved the most striking characteristic of the gown. It mounted to the ears and curved so that the chin seemed to rest in it. Though probably suggested by the gowning of the Merveilleuses of an extravagant period, this exquisite toilette was toned down to suit modern taste.

From the same house, but not from that time of elaborate affectations, come the simple little frock worn by the same actress in the last act. In accordance with a charming fancy for a waist ribbon as the only touch of color of blue, is a ril fancy by long, of a strong and modes siring to probable hold the charact women selv.

Afflow common for and all describe of Way anating and the with a rither maning a decorate of the maning and the maning and the maning and the maning and the maning a decorate of the maning a color on a gown, it was simply sashed with blue. Particularly favored for the white gown is a ribbon belt of a deep orange tone. This fancy belongs strictly to a corsage belted at the long, old-fashioned waist-line, which is making a strong fight for supremacy. And apropos of long and short waist-lines, the present mixed modes are strangely disconcerting to those desiring to renew their wardrobes at once. It is probable, however, that modes will continue to hold the accommodating elasticity which has characterized them for many seasons, so that women may safely continue to select for themselves without violating the fashions.

THE MODES OF LITTLE THINGS

Among the many interesting fancies of a flowery, elaborate and bizarre age that are constantly appearing are gloves with strips of colored kid set inside the fingers or with embroidered backs, lace-frilled handkerchiefs and all sorts of high collars similar to the one described above, and trimmings of tall Prince of Wales feathers. The newest muffs, fascinating things, all a-fluff with ruches, shirrings, and frills of transparent stuffs, are furnished with many inside pockets in which to store the many things deemed necessary for an evening at the opera or theatre. In color these decorative and convenient muffs are supposed to match either the toilette or the manteau.

Hats that not long ago threatened to perch a-top an elaborate chignon have dropped lower than ever, so that the face is again charmingly half-hidden. Hair dressing, too, has changed; with all its artificial abominations discarded, it is parted in the middle, draped gracefully over the ears and then gathered into a knot at the back, posed high or low, as best suits the contour of the head and face. The "béret des étudiants," so becoming, so tempting to women who cling to their fast-vanishing youth, though already an institution of some years, seems to be promised a still longer lease of life. In spite of all this eclecticism in dress, the women who thoroughly understand this art avoid any dissonance between gowning and ornaments, for fashions in jewels and other decorative objects, if sometimes capricious, are as exigent as are the modes in gowns and hats.. Therefore, with the return of many ancient forms of dress comes the revival of the jeweled and metal ornaments peculiar to each.

MEDIEVALISM CLAIMS JEWELRY

And how welcome they are! How futile seems l'art nouveau in comparison to the almost perfect reproductions of the work of famous masters of the art of setting precious stones and manipulating metals. The other day, in a jeweler's window in the rue de la Paix, I saw an exact reproduction of a wonderful medieval ring I had learned by heart from a wonderfully illustrated book of old jewelry.

Jet and crystal tubes and beads are wrought into this deep fringe trimming colored satin that framed the lace intérieur. The short sleeves showed a similar finish. Of yellow Italian straw, trimmed with shaded, rose-colored feathers, the hat was faced with cream silk sewed smoothly over heavy cords; its square crown and curved, upturned brim hinted at the modes of the early spring.

Very spring-like was an afternoon costume worn in the play and sketched at the upper right of page 13. It was of fine écru crin, knife-plaited and bordered with écru taffeta. From a lace yoke, front and back, the plaited corsage bagged a little and then fell in long skirt panels hemmed with silk to match the skirt. The sleeves of plain taffeta were turned back high above the elbows and held by small ball buttons of shaded écru pearl. Dark brown silk bound the irregularly shaped brim of the big hat, covered smoothly with heavy écru lace.

A smart blonde in the audience wore a stunning gown of black beaded net; woven thickly with shining black tubes, it dragged close to the figure, giving an appearance of extraordinary hight; at one side the separate train, weighted by a band of steel embroidery, fell in jabot folds, and bands of the same trimming, circling the corsage of mousseline de soie, formed a charming high-girdle effect banded with steel bead embroidery. This is illustrated in the third figure at the top of this page.

CHARMING GOWNS FOR THE CONFÉRENCE

The left-hand figure of the middle sketch on page 14 shows a gown of cedar-colored charmeuse worn at a recent conférence; its skirt is draped back and front in odd jabot folds and the edges are trimmed with lovely, old-blue, Japanese embroideries, half-hidden in the irregularly falling folds. At one side the corsage turns over an embroidered revers that meets the skirt drapery under a great white rose, nestled in silk frills. The immense bows that trim the hat are of delicate white Alençon lace, wired into shape. The tiniest of silk roses make a charming line of color across the front, Except that the metal composing this ring was modern platinum instead of ancient gold, it was like the old ring in every detail. The setting, pierced and carved into delicate beauty, seemed raised quite an inch above the finger and supported a great emerald with a smoothly rounded top—truly a marvelous reproduction of a bit of medievalism.

Then there was a late model of a tour de cou composed of emeralds and diamonds arranged on a black velvet ribbon. I have seen similar things in old paintings, and with the knowledge gained from my fascinating book, I judged this necklace to be a replica of the "carcan" of the eighteenth century. The artificial stones—rubies, sapphires or emeralds—are woven with real diamonds in an open-work design, beautifully displayed against the black of the velvet ribbon. The jeweled part reaches only half around the neck; beyond, the velvet ribbon is left plain—altogether a great improvement on the ordinary "dog collar."

BRILLIANT PREMIÈRE AT RÉJANE'S THEATRE

A stunning woman at a première at Réjane's theatre wore a graceful toilette of pale green charmeuse, almost completely covered with fine white lace. The long waist-line, tightly belted with green silk, showed the new curve of hip and the pretty, long line under the arms. Below the seamless shoulder-line a distinctly novel and attractive touch was given in the arrangement of the charmeuse with the lace of the sleeves, and in the underarm pieces that reached down onto the skirt. The two skirts formed a double, pointed train of a graceful fullness. The taffeta hat was puffed into a beret shape. (See the first sketch on page 13.)

One of the loveliest gowns worn on the stage that night was one of those soft, clinging robes filled with the baffling mystery of one layer of filmy mousseline de soie beneath the other. (See first illustration on page 14.) Blue and bluish white predominated in these petticoats; the solid blue accented half-covered panels and dropping ends, and then, surprisingly, an embroidered panel in shades of blue and white was revealed among the folds that draped the slender figure. Less illusive, the corsage decorations of shaded blue embroidery and bands of dark blue charmeuse stood out boldly, and just above the black velvet binding of the wide, downward curving brim.

An original touch characterizes the neck opening of the next figure. Swathing the neck and turning over at one side in a single knot is a long, eighteen-inch scarf of black tulle with long ends, one on each side of the shoulder a charming finish for a spring-time costume. The wide hat, dented sharply directly in front to show the forehead, is of fine black straw, faced with black velvet and trimmed with straw-colored feathers. In new millinery and gowning this old-time shade of yellow leads all others. The graceful gown of black marquisette alternates plaited panels with entre-deux of dull, ochre-colored lace, hung over an underdress of dull, willow-green satin. It is narrowly belted with black satin, and black satin points sharply downwards from the neck and over the tops of the short lace sleeves.

The extremely smart tailored suit, shown at the top of page 12, has a lapped closing achieved by a half-belt held at either end by an ornamental button. Transparent mousseline de soie, black over white, forms long revers dropping from a flat collar of white cloth. Passementerie ornaments of white Angora wool stretch oddly across the revers.

GOWNING AT THE LAST VENDREDI DE FEMINA

It was a wonderfully gowned audience that attended the last Vendredi de Femina. White gowning, fairly popular last summer, promises to be almost a rage this season. One modish woman wore a white costume trimmed with quantities of white soutache braid. The skirt seemed to be shaped by two straight lengths of material. The front breadth was wrinkled into tiny, sidewise folds and disappeared under the edges of the back breadth, which hung in straight, flat plaits. Braid richly trimmed the edges of each breadth and was massed in the corners. A finely plaited, white satin underskirt showed on the sides. Large, braid-embroidered buttons adorned the coat, so short as just to cover the hips. The creamy tinge of this satin cloth drew it into perfect harmony with a large putois muff and an ermine cravat, edged with putois, which gave the finishing touch.

flat by large lace and crystal motifs, disclosed a flounced, lace underdress; and crystal beads ornamented the girdle which, though high at the back, in front dropped loosely to the natural waist-line, slenderly outlining the hips.

SMART WOMEN AT THE VAUDEVILLE PREMIÈRE

At the last première at the Vaudeville a prominent society woman wore a charming gown of pale, rose-pink satin. Jet and crystal tubes and beads composed and fringed the corsage, and, in the form of a heavy netted fringe, trimmed the trailing overdress of black mousseline de soie. (See first figure on page 12.)

Shining, changeable blue taffeta was gracefully used in an evening wrap greatly admired that night, and sketched on this page. This wrap was apparently draped from one piece of cloth. It was held to the throat by long hemmed ends of taffeta tied into a big bow; three tassels ornamented and weighted the point at the back.

The two gowns sketched at the bottom of • page 12 were seen on the stage. The first gown is of soft pink satin, neatly covered by an overdress of cream net oddly trimmed with graduated bands of white lace, the widest at the top. Deep points of the lace turn back from the hem, and bands of it trim the corsage in bolero fashion. The tiny black velvet bow posed at the throat, and the line of satincovered buttons reaching from it to the hem of the skirt, are likeable little fads of the

The costume with the Directoire coat, shown on the seated figure on the right, is of pale, tan-colored, satin-faced cloth. Revers that turn from the waist-line over the shoulders deepen into a waist-deep collar at the back, and are faced with Empire-green silk, handsomely embroidered in tan. The long tails of this coat, which hang flat like panels, are lined with green silk. A long gauze veil surrounds the crown and falls from the back of the Panama hat.

Another fashionably dressed woman wore a clinging, dark, taupe-colored charmeuse topped by a Directoire habit coat of faille silk of the same shade. A short-waisted Directoire waistcoat of the new agaric, oddly woven in manycolored threads, buttoned with large, flat, gold buttons.

A singer from the opera wore on the stage an exquisite gown of white charmeuse, which is shown at the bottom of page 14. The skirt, pulled high at one side of the front, and held a charming one, that of the mother endeavoring to lighten the convalescence of the son after a serious illness. Though designed for children, Artists and the wives of artists, who chiefly cording to the approved style for this season, was quite long, had a semi-fitting back and was lined with a beautiful quality of white satin. This same house was showing quantities of wonderful gowns and evening coats made of the richest materials in the most gorgeous colorings; they ranged in price from 125 francs for a lovely satin coat up to 400 francs for a robe of regal magnificence. It is certainly a remarkable place, this small house, and a boon to the woman of taste, a medium figure, and a thin purse; only so beguiling are its bargains, one is often tempted into purchases neither justified nor wise.

In addition to these houses, there are countless small dressmakers in Paris who will make dresses for from 40 to 50 francs. One little woman, who lives on a large boulevard in one of the unfashionable quarters, produces really remarkable work for a most moderate price. As a rule, one must, with small dressmakers, make up in patience and vigilance what one lacks in money, but it is perfectly astonishing what lovely creations have been turned out of this small establishment for 40 francs for the making.

LA PARISIENNE'S ECONOMICAL WAYS

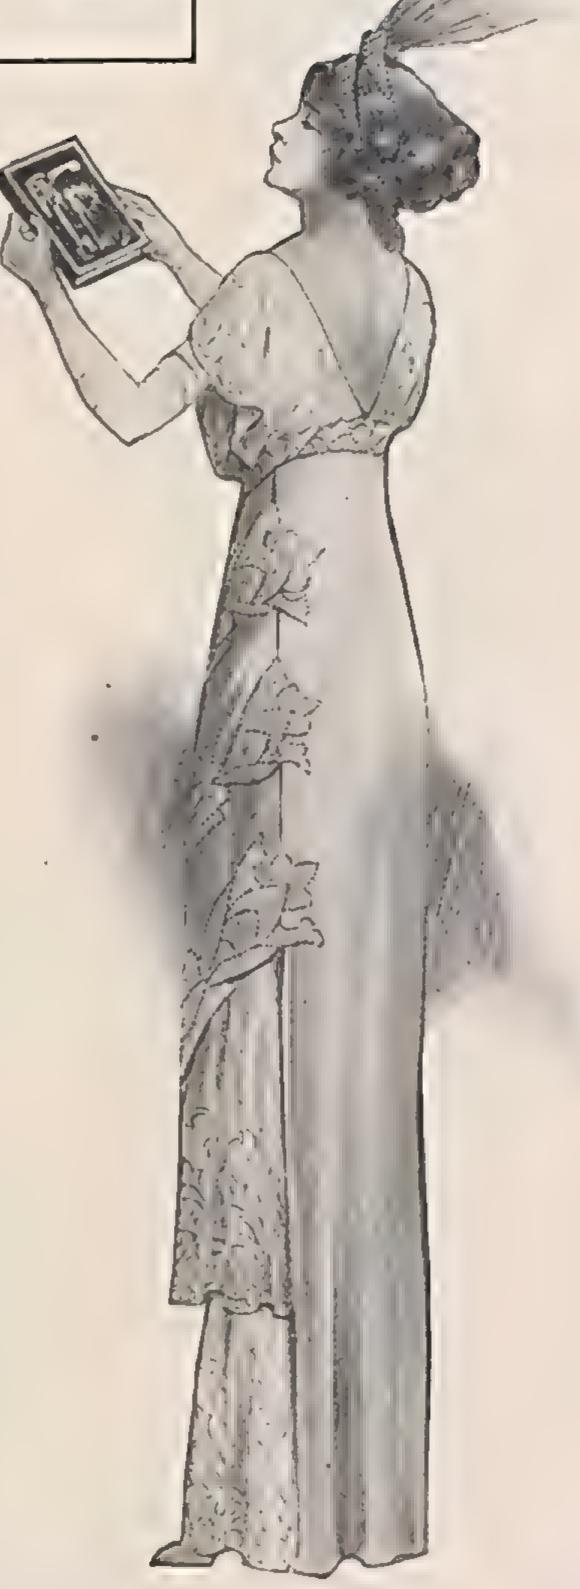

TUCH fun has been poked at the bargain-counter habituée, but after all, breathes there a woman with soul so dead as not to experience an unholy glee as she exhibits to some envious friend an article bought for just one-half its former price? To many women this hunting of bargains is a form of amusement, a sport, but to the woman of a limited income it is an absolute necessity. There is probably no place in the world where one can spend more money for clothes and get less in return, if one buys at normal prices and from the regular stock, than in Paris; on the other hand, there is no place where one can dress better on less money than in this same marvelous little city, if only one watches for the occasions and knows the ropes. For example, there are certain small houses where one can often find wonderful values in ready-made clothes—suits, evening gowns, evening coats and negligées, all of which are models fr m the best houses, and are, therefore, in cut, line and materials, unequalled the world over. A stunning suit of fine, blue serge, elaborately braided and with insets of black satin in skirt and coat, was recently selling for 150 francs. The coat, ac-

Conspicuous among the many lovely new toilettes worn by Mlle. Louise Brignon in the Revue Sans-Gêne is a Beer confection of malines lace and cloth of gold with a square train trimmed with steel and gold embroidery. The fichu arrangement is again shown here in lovely malines lace. In front, at the belt, the lace is caught together under an embroidered motif; at the back it drops to far below the waist-line. The world of art and literature is never indifferent to anything concerning the gifted Rostand family. It was a cultured and a distinguished audience that gathered at the Gymnase to witness the première of "Un Bon Petit Diable," the joint production of Mme. Rostand and her gifted son, Maurice. The night before, at the répétition générale, Mme. Rostand and her son, while receiving warm congratulations from the hosts of friends gathered around them, protested that they had thought only of pleasing children while engaged in this work. Its history is probably known, but it is

VICTIMS OF UNWISE TRAINING

DECADE or so ago the American public awoke to the consciousness that, being no longer a pioneer country, it was being visited with the curse of all old civilizations—an oversupply of the female portion of the population. So America raised its voice and cried, "What shall be done with the superfluous women?" Since then, industry, commerce and the professions have answered the query in very practical fashion by opening business careers for women, so that now some six millions in this country are availing themselves of the chance to be economically independent. But this solution of the problem has brought another in its wake. We did not realize that when the way was opened to them women would rush into business in such numbers as to produce an oversupply of labor that would disastrously affect their working conditions. Fortunately for the low-waged girl, women of wealth and intelligence have espoused her cause and brought about much remedial legislation in her behalf besides improving her condition in a multitude of other ways. That greater progress has not been made is in part due to the worker herself, a fact that discourages both those who furnish the money to support movements in her behalf and those who work individually with the girls. That the working girl fails to show the desirable qualities of ambition and application and is disposed to treat bread-winning as a mere stop-gap between school and matrimony is not her fault; the blame lies with her parents and the school authorities who have had the keeping and moulding of her character. She has been encouraged to regard matrimony as the most preferred of destinies, and even when self-support is forced upon her at an early age, the necessity of careful preparation has usually been slighted. No one has made her realize that six or seven years of bread-winning, even if eventually she achieves matrimony, must be her lot. And how can one reasonably expect young girls brought up in homes of poverty and ignorance to appreciate the value of a thorough preparation for business life? Is not the community rather than the girls to blame?

WORKING girls, because of defective training, not only fail of economic efficiency, but also lack a social consciousness and a desire to aid in bettering their environment. Take the case of factory girls who refuse to do their share in improving unsanitary conditions; employers who desire to furnish healthful surroundings are often met with a thoughtlessness or obstinacy most discouraging to their new-born virtue. Even when proper receptacles are provided, girls from the tenements persist in throwing fruit skins and other refuse on the floor. This condition could be, and now frequently is, ameliorated by the intervention of a social secretary who, if efficient, can improve the manners of her charges as well as broaden their view of life. The cost of such a feature of factory administration is more than retrieved by an increase of efficiency on the part of the workers and in the greater care taken of the plant and its appurtenances. The social secretary could also do a great deal, in her more purely social capacity, to minimize the demoralizing effects of matrimonial air castles. It is the opinion of those who have studied the girl in industry that the hope of matrimony more than anything else prevents her from taking a serious view of the occupation which she hopes will be but temporary and will be soon and pleasantly terminated by marriage. She appears not to consider it worth while to spend several years in equipping herself for effective business service; and this constitutes one of the chief reasons for the lower wages of women. Such a condition should not be allowed to continue, for it is detrimental both to the girl and to the community.

A HOPEFUL sign is the world-wide interest in vocational training which is now engaging the attention of distinguished educators. One of the chief defects of the present school systems is that the training, both of boys and of girls destined for business careers, is not earlier begun. The tendency of the schools has heretofore been to exalt book learning to the discredit of manual training. And this has not been without its influence upon girls who are not apt to desire to excel in what they have been led to regard as inferior work. The new educational movement will do much to elevate manual labor to the position it should occupy in public esteem; as a consequence the school-girl's indifferent attitude toward it will be greatly modified. Further effort to arouse ambition in the wageearning girl might take the form of endeavoring to give her a broader view of life and to make her realize that for the majority, not only will an interval of several years elapse between school and marriage, but that an increasing number of women will fail of wedlock entirely. Besides which, about one in ten of those who do achieve matrimony will be compelled through family misfortune to re-enter the ranks of wage-earners, and under those conditions a practical knowledge of a trade is an invaluable asset. Another phase of the matter which should be salutary in its effect upon her efforts as a professional worker is that the discipline necessary to acquire proficiency in any line of work is an important factor in character development which affects her whole life and would make her a more efficient worker in whatever else she might undertake. She will be a more capable wife and mother if she be proficient as a wage-earner.

The Hectic Gaieties of Our Short-Lived Winter Colonies—Sanely Unusual Entertainments Distinguish the Town Season

GAIN blue seas and gentle breezes, orange groves and sunny landscapes. Perhaps, after all, it is best that one should get away from New York and have at least six weeks in which to commune with nature. Those of the ultra-smart set who are fond of life in the open, go to Aiken, a southern town of no small importance and the most conservative of the winter colonies. At no other resort is the line so sharply drawn between the cottagers and the hotel people, for the native community for years resented northerners coming among them.

Aiken is sand and pines with just the climate for outdoor life—now and then cold with snow, now and then rainy, but, on the whole, warm and sunny. And here the settlers from Meadowbrook and some few others are busy at polo and golf, tennis, riding and hunting. The life is primitive in a way, but there are little dinners and reunions and some card playing and everyone knows everyone else.

And you can do just as you like at Aiken and enjoy life in your own way without being thought too unconventional; but as for being "in" things, if you are not in the "set," you might as well be at the North Pole. And it is the last place in this country where you will be able to get in. It is almost always a case of "freeze out." There are other hotels and colonies not so far away where there is no such spirit and where you can meet delightful people and have a pleasant time; but you know that like the Peri your eyes will always be turned towards the Paradise about which you may know nothing except that it is the place of all others you desire to enter.

CONSERVATIVE WINTER COLONY

Jekyll Island is conservative in a unique way. I do not know whether the rules are changed, but some years ago when I was there motors were not allowed. It is a wealthy community, and there is lavish entertaining. All through this southern country the New Yorkers have large shooting estates and plantations, some of them as fine as that owned by the Pembroke Joneses, which came through inheritance, as Mrs. Pembroke Jones is a southern woman. The Mortimers, the Goulds, the Belmonts and Col. Payne, all spend much time upon these southern game preserves.

Palm Beach is gorgeous and expensive and spectacular. When I say it is expensive, I do not mean it as a reproach. It is, on the contrary, a recommendation. There is always the pleasant feeling that one is meeting only millionaires. It is the one spot where poverty does not exist—at least not in the neighborhood of the hotels. It is thoroughly American, and perhaps for this reason is beloved of many titled foreigners. The life there is brief and merry, for the winter-summer season is exceedingly short.

But nowadays there are as many new fashions in travel as in dress. We want to go to Mexico, to the various islands in the West Indies, to Havana and to South America; we even do not scorn Panama. Some of us take in the Carnival at New Orleans and are made happy with the kindly hospitality of that city, and others go on through to familiar haunts on the Pacific coast. If we do not care for our own southern territory, we escape to the Riviera or to Egypt, which, by the way, is quite à la mode again this year.

LAST FLICKERS OF THE OLD SEASON

The season dies slowly in New York. In March the opera will still be at its hight, but the dancing is nearing its end. People wind up as usual with a wild desire to appear in fancy costumes, hence tableaux and diversions of that character. From the very beginning of the winter one set has been giving really original entertainments. Mrs. Benjamin Guinness and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, with her wonderful house, were their sponsors. Mrs. Payne Whitney, Mrs. James Burden, Mrs. Arthur Scott Burden and other women, who may be depended upon do something notable, were active at fancy dress dances and private theatricals. And the echo was caught in other cities. Chicago had two pageants and Washington, Cleveland and Detroit and other cities had each a fancy dress ball.

Perhaps one of the most talked of diversions was the one which Mr. Moncure Robinson and Mr. Frank Crowninshield gave for the Princess di San Faustino and the Countess de Gontaut-Biron at the St. Regis. Mr. Frank Crowninshield, who has written several booklets on subjects more or less social is, to-day, the wit of the town. Together they gathered the best of the music hall performers in various skits and then had living pictures of a burlesque nature and a programme in which there were funny little allusions to everyone, good-natured and enjoyable, and some of them really clever.

There was much humor in Mr. Robinson's entertainment and no vulgarity—sometimes even these amateur travesties are apt to go a little beyond the line—but this did not and it will survive as one of the traditional evenings. These are all steps toward the sanely unusual entertainment, and it really looks as if we had advanced a great deal.

CUNNING SUBTERFUCES OF THE DÉBUTANTES

For those who preferred to dance and to do nothing else, there have been many opportunities. January brought that series of "parties," as we used to call them, into the hands of the married women of the Newport set, and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt and Mrs. Ogden Mills gave several small dances. The débutantes preferred rather informal dances where they would be left to their own pleasing devices. Consequently at their affairs there was a lopping off of the older people. It could be done so nicely either under guise of a small dance, which turned out to be really a ball, or else by giving a débutante tea a week or so before the ball, which served to avert the wrath of the social Cerberus. Consequently at this season's dances all the dead wood was eliminated and one did not see the seats filled with older people and wall flowers. There were so many débutantes that this gave an excuse for inviting no other girls except a few of the two-year-old class. Frequently it was a relative, not a parent who gave the affair, and this was sufficient excuse when people who were not asked attempted to be offended.

THE BOW TO ROYALTY

It may be of interest to American women who are to make their bows to royalty in England this year to note the Regulations for the Courts. Two Courts will be held before Easter. All applications should have been put in to the Lord Chamberlain at St. James's Palace on January 1st. A lady attending a Court may present one lady, for whom she must be responsible, in addition to her daughter or daughter-in-law. The names should be forwarded by the lady who wishes to make the presentation. Of interest to everyone is the clause that ladies may be accompanied to Court by their husbands if the latter have been (Continued on page 58)

LIFTING SIMPLICITY ABOVE THE COMMONPLACE

Bright red peasant's smock, banded with black velvet traced with gold embroidery, and worn over a black satin skirt

O lift the simple gown above the commonplace, one must possess not only a fine sense of selection, but an instinct for line and color; given this talent, inherent or acquired, coupled with the ability to express in one's clothes something of character and personality, and the problem is all but solved. But the average woman whether from economy or personal taste, who elects to choose practical, simple models rarely achieves any degree of distinction in her dress, probably because, lacking the ability to do her own designing she has hopelessly accepted the perfectly simple and perfectly banal models that are profusely offered each season. How to get away from this dead level of the commonplace has been her problem. Realizing this difficulty Vogue presents in this article, and will hereafter frequently publish, models that will be specially designed for the woman who depends upon the little dressmaker for her gowning, but whose taste demands lines of originality which her own imagination, or that of her seamstress, is unable to supply.

The first step toward distinctive dressing should be a careful study of one's own lines and complexion, and colors should be selected which accentuate the color of hair, eyes and flesh tones. In shopping, do not purchase, hit or miss, this or that novelty because it takes the fancy, but always bear in mind some particular gown or hat with which these frills must harmonize.

A woman of taste but of moderate means who needs must buy her gowns at the less expensive shops, knows that few models nowadays are exclusive; therefore she endeavors to give her gown some touch of individuality, perhaps by the simple removal or addition of a bow, a new twist to sash or belt, the substitution of some other garniture, for the too popular button trimming. The replacing of a machine braided ornament by a bit of handwork often gives a frock the grace of simplicity and distinction which she is seeking. Many a so-called "simple" gown is as flat and tasteless as unsalted soup; it is simple to stupidity. And yet it takes only a line of black or a dash of color, placed with a discerning eye to effect, to quite transform it into something really original and modish.

A COAT FOR THE HOME DRESSMAKER

The number of styles in long coats are so varied that one must be quite extraordinary to lay claim to any originality. Such a one, developed in black with oddly cut collar and cuffs of blue, and wide, pointed revers lined with green, is shown on page 21. These extended over the shoulders and at the back, developed into a deep, rounded cape-collar the lower edge of which met the upper skirt portion. This was high-waisted and novel in treatment. It consisted of a single, straight piece with pointed corners, ornamented with buttons, turned down to form a square tab in the center back. The sides of the back breadth sloped down to below the hips where they met in a point which made an opening for a commodious pocket, one of the features of the garment.

THE TAWNY SHADES OF THE TIGER

A lovely gown, embodying to its last minutiæ the artist's idea of harmony of color and line, was lately worn to a smart luncheon by a young girl whose vivid coloring it admirably suited. It was of grayish brown satin cloth, with pipings, sash and tie of a harmonious fawn shading into burnt orange—the colors in a tiger skin. But all its tones were subordinated to the Titian lights of the hair. The daintily frilled collar and cuffs were of the sheerest écru mull, just the touch of a lighter tone that was wanted to complete this color gamut. This is shown on page 21.

MOURNING GOWN FOR A YOUNG WIDOW

Black, and combinations of black and white, have had such a revival this season, even in the most frivolous of costumes, that one scarcely remembers that black is the outward mark of affliction. At a family dinner party a young widow was most becomingly gowned in an extremely smart and simple costume of black cachemire, which is sketched in the right hand corner of this page. A wide scarf was draped over the left shoulder to shape the short sleeves; the ends came together below the right hip forming a deep point which fell almost to the hem of the skirt which lay some inches on the floor. The right shoulder was draped in chiffon which was caught under a flat, crêpe bow, one loop of which was thrust, at the waist-line, through an opening near the edge of the crêpe tunic. The front drapery was similarly treated, but with the addition of a long, narrow crêpe sash, weighted by a beaded silk tassel which passed under the tunic and fell to the hem of the skirt. A long necklace with pendant of dull jet was the only ornament worn with this attractive mourning gown.

UNIQUE DEVELOPMENT OF THE PEPLUM

The peplum blouse, if one may judge from the latest Paris models, has come to stay for some time. The model shown on this page is extremely chic in line and color—a striking combination of red and black. The black satin skirt is narrow and perfectly plain. The peplum blouse is of Empire red crêpe, a heavy quality and not transparent. The desired straight silhouette is attained by the scanty fullness being held at the high waist-line by a loose belt of black enameled leather which is slipped under straps of crêpe and fastens with a long, gold buckle. The underarm seams, neck and sleeves, are finished with an inchwide band of black velvet outlined with a tracery of hand-embroidery in gold thread. The quaint, long little cap_is of black satin with a narrow, turned-back brim of red veiled with gold tissue; a gold and black ornament holding a tall aigrette posed directly in the center of the brim completes the fetching quaintness of this unusual costume.

PAINTING AN EVENING COWN

One unique evening gown used a chiffon scarf cleverly; it formed the tunic, corsage and short, square train. The gown was in two shades of gray—the soft tones bordering on pale mauve which a gray-haired woman wears so well. The border of the tunic showed a curious, open-work design outlined in sparkling steel beads. The idea is extremely clever and may be carried out at home if one cares to take the slight trouble for so handsome and novel a result. The way to obtain this effect is to sketch or trace on heavy paper a bold, open design suitable for a scarf, baste the chiffon, marquisette or net over the paper, and with artist's tube colors mixed thinly with benzine or turpentine used sparingly, paint in the design in black. The design once painted in, it is an easy matter, requiring only a little time and patience to outline it with steel beads. Thus one obtains the effect of the design having been cut out and of the lining showing through. (First sketch on page 20.)

EFFECTIVE USE OF WOOL EMBROIDERY

A costume modishly ornamented with wool embroidery showed a mingling of several shades of yellow, orange and leaf-brown. The sheath-like, satin slip was of orange veiled with leaf-brown marquisette which was banded on corsage and hem with wool embroidery, displaying, in lattice design, all shades of reddish brown, soft green and rich orange running into the lighter tones of gold. The narrow hem, the chic bow and long sash end were of the reddish brown satin. There was a short, broad, panel-like end of deep cream lace to which was attached the skirt length panel of satin. The transparent, low-cut corsage was edged with a single string of sparkling rhinestones, as illustrated on page 20.

LOVELY MINGLING OF CONTRASTING COLORS

The mingling of contrasting colors was most attractively displayed in the right gown on page 20. The satin slip was a deep shade of shell pink, the veiling slip of palest mauve messaline; frilled slightly at an Empire waistline, it fell to the knees, where the scant fullness was caught by a satin band of pinkish mauve edged with narrow silver lace, a line of silver circled the hip line, simulating a wide, short panel at the back. The bold floral design which headed the band of deep mauve velvet at the hem was in shades of pink and mauve with touches of palest blue in insets of coarse, silver net. The tasseled fichu was of pale mauve chiffon over a pink chiffon kimono waist; short, snug sleeves peeped from beneath the silver-edged drapery. At the center front the fichu was draped under a chou of silver with a short, pointed end of mauve velvet so as to conceal the waist-line.

PROPHETS OF DIVERSE MODES

HERE are in Paris several schools of sartorial art each of which aims to develop a special line of its own similar to the schools in the fine arts.

One of these, adhering to the works of early art, advocates a revival of Eastern modes in garments which show a tendency to the Byzantine straight lines, and, believing that the preeminent factor in dress is color, uses preferably combinations of contrasting shades, knowing full well, as have the greatest musicians, the magnificent effect of a seeming discord. Another school, tired of over-elaboration, has followed the Pre-Raphaelite School in Painting and adopted the quaint and simple for its panache.

Originality, almost an anomaly in coats in this day of infinite variety, distinguishes this service-able garment

The houses where these masters of the art of dress receive their patrons correspond in magnificence with their gowns, for it seems that in order to really produce a dress worthy of the cult, all surroundings must be in harmony with the aim.

THE ATELIER OF THE COLORIST

Take, for example, an establishment of the colorist cult which tends towards the richest and most luxurious of all styles. One enters by a broad, low stair, heavily carpeted, and a butler ushers one into a suite of salons, one of which is furnished in white, one in carved oak and one in wicker, all luxurious with cushions and soft silk hangings at the windows. A host of vendeuses in gowns of shades of taupe with collars of tinted lace, stand ready to serve. Passing through a small door, and descending three or four steps one enters either of two little boudoirs, bowers of silk and lace and roses where one may arrange a stray lock or add a touch of poudre de riz. The first of these nooks is in old rose, the second in a pastel shade of blue. The walls and ceilings of both are covered with taffeta, the windows are hung with dainty net curtains with overdraperies of rose-trimmed taffeta, and luxurious couches on which are flung exquisite négligées stand invitingly against the walls. The dressing tables are clouds of lace and roses with toilette articles in ivory.

The showroom for the models is upstairs. At one end is a small stage, across which the mannikins walk to exhibit their gorgeous robes, posing a moment with marked effect against the soft blue curtains of the background.

SALON OF THE PROPHET OF SIMPLICITY

In a neighboring street is an establishment of the other school which seeks simplicity of line, but which is possessed by the mania for portraiture and art in materials—a glorification of the simple. The house is a masterpiece of quaintness. Walls papered with old-fashioned chintz, odd bits of pottery on table and chimney piece, and closets that are true reproductions of the old painted, wooden clothes-press in which are kept the hundreds of hats and gowns. The floors are carpeted in plain, gray velvet filling, relieved by woven rugs done in clusters of vivid pink roses and still more startling green leaves, in imitation of the carpet rugs of our grandmothers. Painted wooden chairs and sofas with rush bottoms stand stiffly against the walls, and each little mannikin, as she walks through these old-time rooms, looks as though she had just step, ed out of a Kate Greenaway book. With these gowns corsets are of no avail—the style of the dress shows each curve of the body. The tiny, full, short waists are gathered in with narrow cords practically at the chest, and the skirts are long, straight and scanty.

Here, as at the other establishment, hats which complete the theme of the costume are worn with the gowns, for a hat is no small part of any costume, and, lacking just the right touch, might and often does prove the one discordant note. These are curious little affairs with scarcely any trimming, made of soft, supple felt, which bends and twists to the head, taking the shape most suitable for the face beneath.

After viewing the two so different houses one wonders which is following the path to success. Will we finally adopt the modes of the colorist and elaboratist as the heavy brocades and velvets of this winter seemed to indicate, or the styles of the prophet of simplicity; or perhaps, is it all a pose, and will woman, disregarding theories and poses, continue to dress as to her seemeth good, and as to man seemeth becoming?

LOVELY DEVELOPMENTS OF LA ROBE INTIME

ONSIGNMENTS from their French couturiers which are periodically sent over to supplement the wardrobes of many fashionable women here, are including what, to the superficial glance, seems an extravagant proportion of evening gowns. But many of these clinging, diaphanous garments, wrought in exquisite fabrics in pastel shades, often slightly decolleté and devoid of sleeves, save for a filmy frill of lace, are in reality not evening frocks, but tea gowns or glorified house gowns. It is very puzzling at first. But the explanation is simple, though the modes are confused. The Parisienne is enthusiastic this season about her relaxation; it is doing so much for her. And during this rest there is something very refreshing about donning an exquisite garment that flatteringly sets off one's charms.

The French mondaine never rests in an ugly creation—it would be a physical and mental impossibility for her. One charming Parisienne declares that this season all her enthusiasm and all her francs have been expended on her furs and her house gowns. Clever little Parisienne!

These models range from the simple gown she slips on in her boudoir when looking over her morning correspondence, or, as the ideal chatelaine, sees that the household machinery is perfectly adjusted, to the elaborate confection she wears for afternoon tea at the hour when friends drop in informally. Often too, she dines with the family in one of these little frocks which approaches the simple dinner model. To run the whole gamut of these robes intimes would be beyond the scope of a single article; here will be described only those mod-page. The overskirt of the gray charmeuse drapes back from a petticoat of canarycolored satin, which buttons full length down the side closing. The bodice has wide revers, and the pointed yoke is filled in by a wide frill of cream-colored filet lace, which also hangs from the long, V-shaped opening in the elbow-length, slashed sleeve caps.

A graceful gown of dull blue silk cachemire, outlined with bands of fur and draping away over an underdress of old, cream-colored net trimmed at the bottom with two deep flounces of lace, is shown in the left-hand corner of this page. The quaint sleeves were slashed after the medieval mode and laced over puffed sleeves of fine écru net and lace. The crossing lines of the bodice, banded with fur, formed a V for a modesty of delicate old lace.

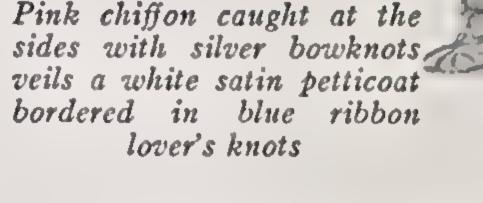

APPROPRIATE PASTEL COLORINGS

Quite obviously designed for a rose-colored boudoir is the lovely house gown of dull rose satin crêpe de Chine shown in the first sketch on page 24. It is charmingly simple in line, and is built after the latest modes. The quaint, high-waisted bodice shows a curving V filled in with a tucker of soft, écru net gathered to a round neck line. The elongated shoulders are especially chic, as are also the full-length, fitted sleeves with their lace wrist ruffles and crochet trimming buttons. The one-piece frock closes to one side of the front, where it fastens with a large, ornamental button of enamel and rhinestones. The skirt is draped over a petticoat of crêpe de Chine in a slightly lighter shade, hemmed with a narrow plaiting of the material.

The exquisite gown of sea-blue velour de laine trimmed in Venetian lace, which is illustrated in the second figure on page 24, is of a simplicity that would perhaps be banal were it els which may be worn informally up to six o'clock and to the family dinner-convenient little affairs that one might slip on at any hour of the day to receive the unexpected guest.

SIMPLE LINES UNBROKEN BY TRIMMING

The middle figure on this page shows the Parisienne's idea of an altogether charming negligée. The underdress of soft ivory satin is veiled with shrimp-pink chiffon embroidered in tarnished silver and caught together at the sides by bowknots of a matching shade. The satin skirt is trimmed with lover's knots of a soft shade of blue satin ribbon which completes the French color scheme. The bottom of the skirt is finished with three ruffles of old Valenciennes lace, deep flounces of which fall over the elbow. This bewitching creation is of an extreme simplicity and of a cut that insures long, graceful lines.

A lovely house gown of London-smoke charmeuse charmingly combined with canarycolored satin and trimmed with fine filet lace is sketched in the right-hand corner of this

not for the heavy accent of black and gold in the sash. The waist is devoid of trimming save for the deep revers crossing the bodice and falling almost to the waist-line. The sleeves show pointing cuffs of Venetian lace, from which fall ruffles of fine net. The skirt exploits the attractive draping of a French house—a rounding overskirt pulled up to the waist-line at one side, from whence falls a long sash end of black satin weighted with gold fringe. This model is typical of the simple, charming house gown developed in the delicate shades appropriate for indoor wear.

The foundation of the last gown on this page is a fitted Empire underdress of silver gray satin; over this is a Greek tunic of Cypress green chiffon with a border of silver and crystal beads. Similar ornaments fasten the tunic over the shoulders and again under the arms, giving a high-waisted effect. The underdress with its long, unbroken row of buttons fastening the scalloped, full-length closing is almost ecclesiastical in effect. The chiffon softly veils the upper part of the closing line with its buttons of gray velour. The round decolleté is banded with folds of soft, fleshcolored tulle, from beneath which falls a frill of rose point lace, which also edges the elbowlength sleeves.

VOGUE POINTS FROM PARIS

C KIRTS for thin dresses are, almost without exception, gathered at the still slightly raised waist-line, but are quite scant at the bottom. Sleeves of all heavy linen and tailor-made gowns are long, and the wide plaited ruches edging the bottom and running up to the elbow at the side are still the popular finish.

Draped dolmans of changeable taffeta, reaching almost to the bottom of the skirt, are being shown as the advanced style in spring wraps; for these, box plaitings of fringed taffeta are much used.

Among the novelties in new jewelry shown at the great houses of the rue de la Paix are betrothal rings of the eighteenth century, composed of two hoops forming, when closed, one ring, and so constructed as to open one within the other. The old serpent ring, belonging to the same period, is again presented in an attractive fashion. One of carved gold has flashing ruby eyes; another of beautifully mingled gold and platinum has eyes of emerald green.

The newest evening wraps show a decided tendency toward straight lines in contrast to the draped forms of the winter models. They fall in demure, Quakerish folds from neck to feet both back and front; the sleeves are fitted into the armholes without fullness, but are very large at the hand.

A pretty trimming for evening dresses, very popular in Paris now, is a narrow passementerie composed of a single row of mediumsized rhinestones. This is used to outline the decolleté or to finish the flowing chiffon sashes. A stunning ball gown of jet-embroidered net, seen at Luciles, was made in a severely plain princess style with slightly draped skirt; it had for its only trimming a band of this rhinestone passementerie, running halfway around the deep, rounded neck and thrown into striking relief against the glittering black jet.

The old-time curled ostrich plume is once more coming into its own, and many of the large houses are showing broad-brimmed hats or small, narrow-crowned walking hats the only trimming of which is a single ostrich plume, poised erect in the front or at the side.

Anklets are still struggling for an existence and, if Poiret has his way, will doubtless become the mode. His latest creation, worn by one of the charming French actresses, Mile. Lavallière, was a short decolleté of black charmeuse; the skirt was slashed at one side and parted continually, revealing white stockings, black slippers and anklets of jade. The gown was heavily embroidered in crystal beads, which formed a wide border at the bottom of the skirt, and a festoon in the front of the corsage; tiny revers of cerise velvet outlined the oblong decolleté. The whole costume was thoroughly bewitching, and, it must be confessed, the anklets added no small amount of chic to the lovely tout ensemble.

The veritable Directoire collar, faced with white silk, modishly finishes the neck of a new redingote gown of black, corded silk. A large bow of crisp, white tulle, simply strapped across the middle, is posed at the base. The pretty, transparent stiffness of this new bow must be preserved or its chic is lost. This bow is the last word in neckwear for tailored costumes and is constantly seen on the boulevards.

Rough, loosely woven woolen goods are to be used for tailor suits and long coats. One of Béchoff-David's newest models shows a tailleur in one of these loose materials, the coat of which is perfectly plain, tight fitting, double breasted, and reaches quite to the bottom of the narrow skirt to which it clings.

The smartest young French women, discarding wrist bags, carry with their tailored costumes flat, envelope-shaped cases of colored leather. For calling costumes they have extremely large bags of woven gold, hung from long chains as thick as one's little finger; whether woven, twisted or braided, these gold cords are knotted or tasseled several inches above where they are attached to the bag. In spite of the use of these bags by the leaders of les modes, there are crowds of women who still cling to the convenient and practical wrist bag, new styles of which are constantly appearing.

The long sprays of osprey and the little tassels of spun glass, which form the chief ornaments for the pearl or gold caps for evening coiffures, are now placed directly in front instead of at the side or back, as at the beginning of the season.

CLEVER FURNISHINGS FOR LIMITED SPACE

A GREAT man has very carefully explained to us "How to Live on Nothing a Year," and a clever man has recently instructed us "How to Live on Twenty-four Hours a Day," but no one has yet told us "How to Live on Five Rooms a Family," and yet almost as many of us are trying to live on that five rooms as on that twenty-four hours or that nothing a year. Perhaps we feel the pressure of space economy even more than that of time or money economy, for in big cities both are cheaper than space.

Even in the largest and most expensive apartments space is an important consideration, for the mistress of such a suite comes into competition in completeness of furnishings and elaborateness of entertaining with owners of large houses. But to the woman with a limited income who is forced to confine her home-making and entertaining within the narrow compass of five, seven or nine rooms of an apartment house or hotel suite or else to retire to the limbus of a suburb, space economy is a guiding principle in life. There are so many desires to be satisfied in this small space; one must sleep, eat, serve afternoon tea, give bridge parties, even allow one's husband a small place in which to live, breathe and have his being, and yet there must be no appearance of crowdedness, nor any signs of the folding bed-bookcase or the sofa-bed of the old-time "flat." The shops do not particularly help one in furnishing an apartment on a space-saving basis. They have the right kind of furniture, but often they do not realize its possibilities. The best one can do is to pick out a table here, a chair there, and when the shops fail to meet requirements, to call upon the interior decorator or the cabinet maker to suggest or execute.

ORIGINAL TABLE FOR A DEN

An interior decorator has had executed for his own use in a little, built-in den a unique desk-closet-bookcase-table. He bought one of those table-desks with a drawer in the middle and a narrow shelf at each end. The shelves are about fifteen inches from the floor, are supported, back and front, by little slats and are open at the ends of the table. He had his workmen make a little closet out of each of these shelves by placing a board behind the slats at each end, another between the drawer and the shelf to form the closet back, and a door with a lock and key across each end of the table. There was still unutilized space below the drawer and between the closets. This, it at first seemed, he would need for knee room when using the table as a desk. But at last he hit upon the plan of building into that space two shelves which, by touching a button, could be made to slide back far enough to permit him to draw close to his desk. These shelves were filled with books, so that when flush with the table edge, the gay bindings were in full view. The closets may be used for writing materials, liquors, cigars, pipes, magazines—any of the little things that usually litter a den. A cabinet-maker or interior decorator would so transform a table for no great sum.

A certain firm has imported a wonder-working little table, shown at the left of the upper photograph. It is only a little table, twenty-two inches square, but the top is quite deepabout twelve inches. It is made of two pieces of wood. There is no door, no way of entering this closed-in compartment.

A MAGIC TEA TABLE

It is time to serve tea. The hostess places her hands on the edge of the table each side of the seam, and pulls the two leaves up as one opens the doors of a latticed window. As they open up, a shelf, concealed within the table, and containing a tray completely equipped with a tea set, rises to view. The two leaves of the table, which are hinged at the ends, open out flat, forming a table forty-four inches long. The tray has a porcelain bottom and brass handles by which to carry it. The two folding ends of the table have porcelain insets, so that the wood may not be injured by the hot cups. Like the little old French woman who, fearing the obliquy of the term, Canadian-French, said, "I am French from France," this little table is also French from France. It may be had in mahogany at the post-holiday price of $33, and in oak for $35. A pretty little Japanese tea set or one in a delicate pink and white pattern, consisting of six cups, bowl, pitcher and tea pot, comes with the table.

MANY TABLES IN ONE

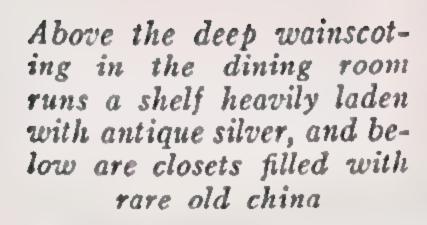

For the woman who gives many tea and bridge parties the "nested tables" illustrated are a great convenience. There are four or five tables, one fitting in under the other. They are usually very pretty little things, often of mahogany inlay; but if one objects to the (Continued on page 78)

THE PICTURE TO THE ROOM SUITING

ICTURES like friends should be selected for their lasting qualities. Some pictures like some people captivate us at once by showy qualities, but fail to hold us long on account of their shallowness; some keep our interest for a while, but end by boring us; then there are those rare ones with which we live year by year, that remain ever attractive, restful and inspiring.

One of the most important factors in the sustained appeal of a picture is the suitability of its environment. Obviously, a dainty conceit of Fragonard or Pater will appear trivial in a stately hall, for instance, but would exert an unfailing charm in a small reception room. A battle scene by Meissonier would not be bearable for a week in a bedroom, and a cattle picture by Troyon will be enjoyed in every other part of the house except the dining room.

In selecting pictures one should avoid choosing those that have become wearisome through their ubiquity. With such a wealth of material to draw upon, there is no necessity for duplicating the houses of our friends. It is the purpose of this article to point out a number of beautiful pictures suitable for the various rooms of the house, reproductions of which can be purchased at comparatively small cost from the art shops in our country.

PICTURES FOR THE PASSING GLANCE

Beginning with the hall. This room is least suitable for pictures as it is often dimly lighted and too narrow to afford a good view of them. When the hall is of ample proportions, a few pictures may be used effectively. This is not the room for dainty, French color prints or delicate line drawings. Pictures broadly handled, bold in treatment, appealing instantly to the passing glance, are those that should be used here—a portrait of Frans Hals, one of good size, an Infanta by Velasquez, a Holbein, a Clouet or, in landscape, a Hobbema or a Constable.

PICTURES TO LIVE WITH

In pictures for the living room one has the widest range of selection. Of course the scheme of decoration must be considered even though it represent no particular style or period. A dainty living room with light furniture and with curtains and wall covering in delicate tones provide the proper setting for the cheerful pictures of the seventeenth or eighteenth century. Here we have a veritable gold mine of material to draw upon—fêtes champêtres by Watteau and Lancret, irresistible bits of fancy by Pater, portraits of beautiful women by Gainsborough or Reynolds or Romney.

A Drinker, by Leyster, is a convivial subject for the dining room

If on the other hand the living room is of large, stately proportions, works of greater solidity and carrying quality should be used to give the final touch of dignity. A room of this sort is just the setting for reproductions from the paintings of the greatest masters-Velasquez, Rembrandt, Titian—or for carbon prints of famous architectural subjects of the old world.

The dining room should be simplicity itself as to decoration, and if any pictures are used they leries of this country and of Europe are filled with masterpieces inspired by music, and the reproductions of them are so plentiful and inexpensive that there is no reason for lack of variety. A Saint Cecilia that one does not often see is that from the painting by Zampieri, a captivating composition that should wear well as a decoration. A wonderful painting, appropriate for the music room but seldom seen there; is Memling's Angels Playing on Musical Instruments, from the Royal Museum at Antwerp. Montagna's Concert of Children is another enchanting work that is unhackneyed. A charming picture is Fragonard's The Music Lesson. A finer painting, though of entirely different style and treatment, is Terburg's Music Lesson or Mandolin Player, a good, solid work of which one could never tire. Then there is Giorgione's Concert Champêtre that might replace his better known Concert, Van Eyck's two indescribably lovely panels, The Singing Angels and the Musician Angels, Lancret's La Musique, Melozzo's Angels, Watteau's La Finette, Boucher's La Musique-but one could go on indefinitely.

Chardin's Le Benedicite

OUIET PICTURES FOR THE BOUDOIR

Every picture that is placed in the bedroom should be conducive to quiet and rest. Portraits, be they never so good, should be avoided, as also scenes of stirring action. Landscapes of nature in her tranquil moods are good—the wonderful canvases of Turner, the Barbizon School, Corot for reposeful scenes of early misty mornings and evenings, pictures of sheep as interpreted by Mauve. The Autumn of this great Dutch painter, now in the Metropolitan Art Museum, is one of the best of his sheep studies. Pictures of a devotional nature are not out of place in the sleeping room, but they should be used sparingly. A most attractive one that combines many of the elements of popularity, a reproduction of which is almost never seen in this country, is The Virgin and the Infant Jesus by Notte.

Tadema's Reading from Homer. Holbein's Erasmus is a compelling portrait; Watt's Portraits of Tennyson and Morris are both interesting and more uncommon than those by other painters. Redburn's Sir Walter Scott is, oddly enough, a stranger to most of our libraries.

Chaucer's Pilgrims of Canterbury, by Blake, is a long, narrow picture of considerable quaintness that appears to advantage over a bookcase; copies of the Abbey illustrations of Shakespeare's plays fit into nooks around the shelves and in the corners. Rodin's Penseur, always compelling, if not available as a cast, can be used in a photograph. This great sculptor's Victor Hugo or his much discussed Balzac are both immensely impressive. Reproductions of the mural decorations of Puvis de Chavanne are often used to advantage in the library. Nothing could be more beautifully appropriate here than his sublime History, the original of which hangs in the Boston Library; The Sacred Grove Dear to the Arts and to the Muses, from the Palais des Arts at Lyons; or the Happy Hemicycle of the Sorbonne Letters, Sciences and Arts, from the Sorbonne in Paris.

Some of the frescoes of Puvis de Chavanne are most satisfactory in photographic reproduction. They are pictures that one likes to muse on before the lights are turned out. Somewhat suggestive of Puvis is the Sérénité of Henri Martin, a beautiful work superbly conceived and carried out. Reproductions of the land-scapes of Wynant and Homer Martin can now be had.

OVER THE BOOKSHELVES

Many of our friends, to judge by the very few subjects that find their way into the realm of the books, have difficulty in selecting appropriate pictures for their libraries. The most popular are photographs of authors of the New England School-Emerson, Whittier, Lowell, Longfellow. If there is any variation, Tennyson, Dickens or Thackeray are the favored ones. Carlyle, by Whistler, is almost the only great picture of literary flavor that one comes across in the libraries in this country. Even this has not as yet become extremely popular, but as we are such an imitative people we may soon expect to see it hanging over every bookcase in the land. A wonderful picture, seldom seen in the average home, is Aesop, by Velasquez, which might well replace Alma

MODEL FOR A LINEN GOWN

Because even the most modest of summer wardrobes of necessity includes one or more linen gowns a large portion of the ingenuity of the dressmakers goes into the designing of originalities to give chic to this most tailored of summer frocks. The right-hand model on this page is of Wedgwood blue linen, trimmed in white linen with a simple, Irish crochet ladder-stitch inside a two-inch hem. The quaint bib with its tiny Irish collar and bow is one of the prettiest of demure modes. A single line of crochet buttons runs down the front, and there is a soft sash of black satin with fringed ends. Pink and white linen would make it an afternoon frock.

darker than the shade of the body of the gown, which is that excellent tint known as pavement gray. The girdle sash is of black chiffon finished by a wide, chenille fringe. Just above the deep hem of the skirt it catches and holds the drapery of a shaped flounce. The bodice is laid in one deep tuck on either side, and the front opening has a one-sided lingerie frill finished by a corded ornament, from which hang crochet balls.

REVIVING THE ORGANDIES

Everyone regrets the charming, oldfashioned organdie when it is spurned by the modistes, and its return to favor is always enthusiastically welcomed. This year we are to have it again, and most naturally, for it is essentially suited to the quaint fashions of the season. The lovely frock of this material shown in the second lower sketch has just come from Paris. A white organdie, Two tones of gray are used for the figured with bunches of blue and pink original of the model in the left-hand roses, is mounted over a green chiffon corner of this page. shoulder drapery, edged with the lace. The stores are now showing pretty organdies in almost any combination of colors, or if one desires less expensive materials, dimities in flowered patterns, made up over a colored cotton lining, are good substitutes. Cotton voiles, endless in their variety of patterns, are most satisfactory and durable for summer wear. They are splendid for the limited wardrobe, as they do not need the frequent pressings called for by muslins.

ORIGINALITY, NOT ELABORATION, GIVES DISTINCTION

A lovely evening gown is shown in net lace come from each the first sketch on this page. For it shoulder and form a low is used a deep cream batiste. The skirt V. The girdle is of apple shows a short, square train, and except green taffeta, which is for the half yoke of eyelet embroidery at the hips, is untrimmed; but almost the entire waist is of the eyelet work. It comes up in bands over the shoulders and is arranged in a plastron both back and front, with V's of the batiste carried up under a belt of turquoise blue, uncut velvet ribbon. The sleeves have no vestige of trimming, but are just soft draperies of the batiste. Such a smart little frock is given in the second sketch, a Poiret model, designed for theatres, restaurants or home wear. White satin is veiled with black; on this is a striking wool embroidery—greens, purples, and reds mingled boldly. Down the front this runs in a little apron, and also forms a simple border around the sleeves, neck and tunic. The yoke and sleeves are of white chiffon.

When it comes to summer evening gowns the long purse has not the usual advantage over the short one, for simple materials are both more effective and more suitable for hot weather than costly ones. A gown with a freshness suggesting the hand of the laundress has a charm that silks and satins seldom attain. Few fabrics are as satisfactory for the purcombination, a toque of burnt straw faced in brown would complete an admirable street costume.

GOWN OF PLAIN AND FOULARD SILK

A figured and a plain silk is always an effective combination for an afternoon frock. The one shown in the last sketch on the page combines a figured foulard and a plain blue silk. The long skirt gives opportunity for a deep facing of blue silk, corded at its joining to the foulard. Down one side of the waist is a wide drapery gathered into the belt. Very little lace is needed for the onesided collar, which starts just over the top of the shoulder and is finished under the drapery. Inside the lace edge is a stitched fold of silk. Over it comes a flat collar of foulard, held down by silk buttons. The yoke is of sheer white batiste. Very chic is the stiff, straight sailor of fine Milan straw, banded in black velvet and with a stiff black and white aigrette at the front.

A PRACTICAL WRAPPER

It is very difficult to keep as dainty as one would wish in the matter of wrappers, and yet there is nothing more unattractive than a bedraggled, spotted > who has not much left over from other expenditures, when it comes time to buy a wrapper, is apt to look longingly and hopelessly at the lovely things that can be indulged in only by the well-to-do, and in despair get something cheap and ugly to fill her needs. right material. With the tan and brown is true, and nice when new, but most undesirable as soon as the least bit soiled. Or she sends home hideous figured things because she find it impossible to get pretty ones at really low prices. It would be so much better if she chose a utilitarian color in a good wearing material and kept it fresh with washable collars and cuffs. A practical wrapper is made of dark blue henrietta, cut a good two inches off the ground, so that it is both clean and comfortable. This has a big lingerie collar and turnback cuffs. It hangs full from a square yoke, that is lined with muslin to keep it from rubbing on the neck; for a belt there is just a blue silk cord. Whenever it needs it, the henrietta cloth itself goes to the tub.

SHIELDS FOR THIN FROCKS

A dainty shield for a thin dress is made by covering an ordinary pair on the side which is nearest the dress with a piece of the same lawn or batiste of which the waist is made. This makes them far less conspicuous.

THE SMART MODE IN LOW SHOES

When it comes to the question of low shoes in black for street wear during the spring, and at Southern hotels, dull kid or Russia calf is preferred to patent leather, which has become so generally worn that, though it is as fashionable as ever, it lacks somewhat in distinction. Any sort of shoe is obtainable in the dull kid—a slipper, thin-soled and high heeled, a medium heavy sole with Cuban heel or a Colonial pump. On these are used the same fancy steel buckles that have been the mode with patent leather, and the dull kid with a bright trimming is very effective. Some women, however, prefer them with a leather buckle to match; others, again, like buckles in black enamel and silver.

TAILORED GOWN FOR THE SLENDER FIGURE

For the sylph-like figure the gown shown in the fourth drawing on this page is ideal, but let the woman of heavy proportions beware. Its plastron and little hip skirts belted in with patent leather and a steel buckle are most chic. It is of linen, with a color scheme of two shades of green. Black braiding down the front and steel buttons in groups of four give a military air, which there is no attempt to lighten by a compromise of frilly neckwear or cuffs; only a creamy fold of white linen at the neck opening softens it for the face. Charming though it is in green, it would be far more serviceable in a combination of tans and browns, which are less likely to fade; or white and dark blue would be smart. HE spring modes, gauged by the earliest gowns shown, bid fair to be unusually effective and at the same time practical. The grace of the slim silhouette seems to have obtained a renewed lease of life from the French designers. Though skirts continue scant and clinging there are many charming innovations in line and trimming.

A BETWEEN-SEASON FROCK

For a luncheon or afternoon frock to use in the between-season's period when the wardrobe needs a few little additions to carry one gracefully to the end of the season, one could not do better than buy the model sketched in the middle of the page. It is of chiffon, black over white, which forms the bodice and the short tunic, from beneath which issues the lengthening skirt of black crêpe météore. The back of the dress shows a black crêpe météore waist-panel, which appears to be fastened to the waist by groups of crystal buttons on each side. This panel is a little longer than the tunic, so that it overlaps the lengthening skirt. Crystal buttons are one of the smartest features of the new spring gowns. The Honiton lace forms a triangle below the round yoke, outlines the new armhole effect and the bottom of the tunic. To one side of the front a short, black satin sash fringed in white hangs from the girdle. The collar and shallow yoke are of fine net; the fulllength sleeves are of the double layers of chiffon finely shirred at the outer seam, after a smart innovation in sleeves. The plain black crêpe météore skirt bottom makes an otherwise rather perishable frock distinctly serviceable. It could do duty now as a luncheon frock under the fur coat, and will be equally useful as a warm-weather costume later on. Price, $45.

Bridge frock of the new crêpelike crash in black and white trimmed with rose satin

BRIDGE FROCK OF THE NEW CRÊPE-LIKE CRASH

Very spring-like in coloring, and just the thing to wear to an informal afternoon bridge, is the charming model shown in the left-hand corner. It is built of a new clinging fabric, a crêpelike crash in a black and white weave, which achieves a soft gray color that blends effectively with the touches of black and rose satin and chiffon used as trimming. The side bands outlining the square yoke are of black satin; the yoke itself, of fine cream-colored net, has crossing folds of rose-colored chiffon.

The bottom of the yoke is piped in myrtle-green satin outlined with a row of gun-metal buttons. The collar is edged with black, hemstitched chiffon, as are the undersleeves of fine cream net, which also have overlay folds of the rose chiffon coming out from under the turn-back satin cuffs. The highwaisted skirt gives a long tunic effect; plain back and front breadths outlined with gun-metal buttons at top and bottom part at one side to disclose a fan section of the crash. The overskirt drapery is narrowly banded in folds of black satin. The raised waist-line running up high on one side has a narrow fold-over faced in rose satin and piped in myrtle green. The triangular turnover at one side, faced in rose, gives the touch of originality to the treatment of the waist-line. This gown is as practical as it is smart and original. The supple fabric is one of the very newest conceits in spring materials. It makes an eminently serviceable gown for the season when tubbed frocks are in order, under which heading this versatile frock may again be listed. Price, $35.

THE NEW CAPE WAIST

Extremely modish is the well-cut spring frock shown at the top of the page. It makes a chic little gown to wear for informal occasions and during the warm spring days, and later will render service as a street costume. The soft messaline is dark blue relieved by touches of cerise chiffon in the hemstitched edging of the cream net collar and undersleeves. The black silk crochet ornaments on the shoulders and down the front closing give the tailored air. Decidedly new is the draping cape which falls over the plain, three-quarter length sleeves. The skirt is a plain, well-fitting model curving away on one side of the front closing line. Such a gracefully simple model would make an excellent gown for traveling or for the informal luncheon or cup of tea at the smart restaurants. Price, $39.50.

INEXPENSIVE PETTICOAT OF SOFT MESSA-LINE

A pretty silk petticoat is shown by a well-known Fifth Avenue house noted for its specialties in petticoats, ranging from the moderate priced and practical to the expensive and elaborate. Under the former heading comes a good model in an excellent quality of messaline with a fitted top and with the bottom, measuring the fashionable two yards, edged by a six-inch flounce of the messaline. This may be had in all the regular street and evening shades for $3.

WHAT S H E

The Dull Mid-Season is Brightened by Several Novelties-A Loose, Circular Train, a Plastron Girdle, and Embroideries Inspired by the Durbar

HE mid-season is a perplexing one for the well-dressed woman. Her winter clothes have a worn look, at least so she fancies, her newly acquired southern wardrobe is not for a cold northern February, and the Lenten period of sack-cloth and ashes is fast approaching.

FOR WEAR EN PROMENADE

If she must have a new gown either of the two following street costumes will appeal to her. Deceptive is the creation in the third drawing at the top of the page, for it undoubtedly resembles a coat and skirt suit, but is actually made in one piece. This gown is of darkest blue "rep" serge—the sort of material which never seems to get hopelessly wrinkled or stained or dustgrimed—and its black trimmings are really distinctive, for they consist of rows of machine-stitchings and matching embroideries resembling applications of flat, fine braiding, and rows of half-ball serge buttons, flatly-rimmed with rubber. One touch of color—a band of orange-yellow linen-about the edge of the neck, relieves the dullness of this runabout gown, and it is repeated in the Milan straw hat trimmed with a huge draped bow of darkest blue taffeta ribbon and nothing else.

light the eye of the artist. It is of corded silk of the dark, rich Lydig brown and its overskirt, very long in front and at the back, runs into the waist-band far over toward the left side. The girdle of brown satin, fancifully braided, ends under the sideopening of the coat in two flat tabs, heavily weighted and finished with long ball-fringe. The oddly cut jacket, outlined with stitched bands, fastens with flat silk buttons and very long silkbound buttonholes, but its really novel feature is the collar which curves deeply at the back in hood effect and in front is strapped down with little tabs of silk, embroidered with green, yellow and dull gold threads, a trimming scheme which is repeated on the wrists of the sleeves.

TAM CROWNS AND CRUSH TOQUES

With the Lydig brown suit, as well as with other trotteurs, is worn a crowned confection of soft, crushable fancy straw, gathered into a band of twisted gold metal cloth and trimmed with a tall brown aigrette. These crushable effects in headgear are by no means confined to the tams, for the toques also have similar crowns, usually developed in masses of flowers upon which are imposed plumes or aigrettes, matching the color

The second street costume would de- scheme of the costume of which the hat should form an integral part.

FOR A DAUGHTER'S WEDDING

One of these crushable-crowned toques has been made up for a silveryhaired mother of a girl who is to be married this spring. The tiniest of petunias form the crown and in front rears an imposing and very tall petuniacolored aigrette. (See middle illustration on page 40.) The gown is of gray chiffon and silver lace hung over a gray satin skirt which in front overlaps a gray chiffon petticoat, and when the wearer chances to lift her dress one may catch not only a fleeting glimpse of the purple facing of the gray satin, but of feet shod in purple-heeled gray suède. A large petunia nestles in the gray chiffon of the bodice, which is built over gray lace and has the fashionable sleeves of contrasting materials.

A "LUCKY" OPAL GOWN

During this mid-season interim the well-dressed woman will learn that it pays to saunter, with wide-open eyes, about the big shops and carefully examine the robes of lingerie, lace and kindred filmy fabrics, which foam upon the counters. Recently one diligent seeker picked up a genuine treasure in WEARS the shape of a pattern of plain and wisteria flowered chiffon in pale lavender and flesh pink, and the "opal" gown shown at the left of page 40 was the result. Now it happens that she knows the address (and keeps it a profound secret) of a seamstress who quickly grasps ideas, and so between them they put together the half-made robe, using the flesh pink for the petticoat, the flowered lavender for the overskirt and bodice, and plain lavender for the opal bead-fringed short tunic which in front is tucked under an opal bead girdle and has one edge held to the overskirt with opal bead cabochons. But it was she, not the seamstress, who thought of joining the edges of the overskirt and the slashed sleeves with little bands of guimpe of flesh-colored chiffon and of having flesh-colored silk stockings to go with opal-bead-trimmed, lavender satin slippers. Truly a charming "lucky" gown, for she was an October child.

ALL HAIL TO THE NEW TRAIN

Tri-colored materials are being extensively used. This means the use of one color with two shades of another. At one of the recent Bagby mornings was seen a really stunning gown, sketched at the right of this page, of black taffeta shot with two shades of green that had the very latest novelty in trains—a wondrous graceful adjunct of the plain and narrow skirt, that floats like a loose wide panel from the waistline to the floor and from that point begins to gradually round into a perfect curve. This is a welcome relief from the long-used double and single points and the square effects, and in this instance the back of the gown gave not the faintest hint of what the front was like, for instead of finding draperies there, only a deep yoke was disclosed.

THE DURBAR INFLUENCE

In the Far East where every jewel is pierced so that it may be firmly attached to the trappings of the household elephant when it is not needed for the adornment of any member of the family, travelers from the Occident have grown accustomed to precious bead embroideries, but the glass beads of black and two shades of green interspersed with silver threads, which formed the Durbar embroideries on the yoke of this taffeta gown, were a most interesting touch and almost as effective as though recently imported gown of changeable taffeta in blue, mauve and beige, proves that there are still some undiscovered twists. The first drawing on page 39 shows this costume. The plastron of taffeta starts at the right side of the bodice and apparently is fastened to it with four embroidered buttons and clongated satin-bound buttonholes; it is terial as the gown. This last was bor- caught into folds beneath the arm and dered with the Durbar embroidery and meets the satin belt at the left back had a truly Oriental plastron of the where it falls into a single end. tiny super-bodice was fittingly balanced by a little frill of black maline which finished the lower edge of a bead-embroidered stock to be attached at will a most convenient accessory when the gown is needed for out-of-door service. The elbow sleeve was finished with a Durbar bordering and a frill of black plaited net edged the long undersleeve of black net over green chiffon. The new shaped hat of black tagal straw had a huge aigrette rising in front.

The embroidery on this bodice as well as on the cream net yoke, is done in beige silk, and the sleeves, entirely of blue chiffon, lack cuffs but have turn-backs that are fastened with big silk-covered buttons. The skirt is absolutely new. Made entirely of the shot taffeta, the petticoat is narrow and barely escapes the ground, and over it is a drapery heavily weighted which slightly ripples across the front of the figure, passes plainly over the hips at the back and at the left front overlaps the shorter side, and runs smoothly into the cerise satin

THE LATEST IN FASHIONABLE BLOUSES

Wise is the woman who owns a collection of fancy blouses, for she thus displays her faith in their capacity for "dressing up" the plainest of tailormades when she takes off her jacket in public. The blouse of oyster satin on page 39 is the acme of simplicity and smartness. What is actually a deep plain yoke of satin with single plaits crossing each shoulder, is broken in front by a second or tab-yoke of oystercolored net, outlined with a satin piping and trimmed with short loops of black satin ribbon. The low-cut and gracefully curved bodice of the satin is outlined with a row of tiny satin-covered buttons, more of which appear on the three-quarter sleeves, which have cuffs of the same design as the smaller yoke, but are entirely of satin.

Flame shades in chiffons and nets are a positive fad this season in the realm of blouses. In one there is a lacy foundation of coarse and inexpensive imitation filet mesh, above that is a layer of white gauze, then flame chiffon and finally dark blue veiling.

New Trimmings and Good Style Models in Frocks for the Dancing Class—Two Smart Designs for the Coat Between-Seasons

The model illustrated in the upper left-hand corner dis-Plays a lovely French frock of sheer mull trimmed with eyelet embroidery and filet lace, both of which are extremely smart for children's trimming this season. In this model the shoulder Yokes and short sleeves are composed of these two joined together to give the kimono effect. The V inset is of mull lucked crosswise which reaches to the pink satin, folded belt finished with a bow at the back. A unique designing is effected by the oval inset of filet lace divided by the belt and opened by the

In spite of the rich materials, the effect, because of the simplicity of line, is extremely childlike.

FROCKS OF A LITTLE ENGLISH DANSEUSE

Another charming little frock shown in the middle of the page is designed after an English model created for the belted low this simple, charming model. younger daughter of a British peeress This is shown in the upper right-hand noted for her wonderful dancing. The corner of this page. little daughter already shows the inherited talent. She has recently been permitted to dance for her mother's guests at a house party. One of the frocks this little danseuse wore is a pretty model of white ninon embroidered in soutache braid and trimmed with narrow ruffles of finely plaited net. The sleeves of the kimono yoke are edged with this, and a delicate, blue satin sash with a long end to one side of the back finishes the waist. The skirt, finely gathered at the waist-line, forms an overdrapery for the lengthening flounce of embroidered ninon. The bottom of the overskirt turns up all around to form slashed points in front; it is edged with a plaiting of the fine net.

A second dancing frock designed for this small dancer was a delightfully unaffected model, distinctly English in its simplicity. It was of cream-colored, India silk made with a pointed neckline and falling in one piece from shoulder to hem. The only ornamentation was a wide, upward pointing panel, reaching from the skirt to the neck-line, front and back; miniature panels of this type trimmed the sleeves above frills of soft net. BETWEEN-SEASON COATS

Already designers for children's clothes are receiving orders for early spring garments. Very appropriate to the between-season period is the plaid and green cloth coat for a little girl shown in the lower left-hand corner. The plaid of the front of the coat shapes a straight waist and skirt. The trimming of plain, green cloth in the deep, buttoned cuffs and wide, shallow collar forms a deep panel in the back slanting in at the hem. In front the closing is effected with two large buttons of enamel fastening in buttonholes piped in the green cloth. The green cloth cuffs have inset wrist cuffs of blue which gives a touch of color in harmony with the upstanding blue feather of the round, closefitting little cap of green hemp.

Exceptionally well cut is the coat of sage green broadcloth with trimmings of cream ratine shown in the right-hand corner. This model displays the smart new skirt effect which is the latest innovation in children's coats. The joining line of waist and skirt slopes up on one side so that the back and sides give the long waisted effect particularly good in children's modes. Folds of the ratine piped with the broadcloth take the place of a collar and form deep cuffs. The side closing is fastened low with smoked pearl buttons. With this attractive costume is worn, well down on the head, a round cap of shirred, sage green surah, trimmed at one side with a pretty feather in the soft coloring of the pheasant.

No. 2030.—Effective costume of creamcolored serge trimmed with black velvet and having a chemisette of Venise lace. The model features the new stitched armhole with a sleeve cap of black velvet, from which comes the long serge sleeve with its deep pointing cuff of the black velvet. The waist is extremely simple, but quite chic with its youthful, round collar of velvet, the pointing ends of which are trimmed with the new crystal buttons. The velvet trimming band down the front also shows these smart buttons. The waist is gathered at a raised waist-line and attached to a peplum of yoke depth, which forms the upper part of the skirt. The lower part of the skirt is a two-piece model slashed at one side over an inset of the black velvet and featuring a trimming line of buttons covered in the cream serge.

The model requires, in medium size, 4½ yards of serge 50 inches wide, yard of velvet 19 inches wide, 1/4 yard of all-over lace for chemisette, 12 glass buttons, 7 serge-covered buttons. The pattern of the waist is cut in 12 pieces. The pattern of the skirt is cut in 4 pieces, girdle foundation. Price, 50 cents for waist or skirt.

TO. 2027.—Striking tailor costume of steel-gray cachemire de soie trimmed with insets of the new, old-time white silk striped in black velvet. The excellent lines of this model shape the tall, slender figure of the present-day modes. The vest effect is one of the newest features of spring fashions, and is particularly effective in this well-cut tailored gown... Pointing insets are displayed in the slashed designing of the skirt. The closing is effected to one side in front, and the one-piece model is belted at a natural waist-line with a two-inch wide band of black velvet buckled in an oval of maroon enamel and silver. The side seams, following a continuous line on waist and skirt, are outlined by enamel buttons rimmed in silver and with loops of black silk crochet, the last two of which give an unbuttoned effect over the insets at either side of the skirt at the bottom. These insets are of the velvetstriped silk, as are the turn-back cuffs and V yoke. This style of frock is equally smart and practical for the linens and crashes and would be attractive in rose-pink linen trimmed with rose and white striped linen and having white crochet buttons and a belt of white suède buckled in pearl.

The model, in medium size, requires 4½ yards of cachemire de soie 44 inches wide or 5½ yards of 36-inch linen, 1 yard of trimming material 19 inches wide or 1/2 yard of 36-inch linen, 26 buttons and 3/4 yard of two-inch velvet for belt, 1/4 yard of fine net 19 inches wide for chemisette. The pattern of the waist is cut in 11 pieces. The pat-front, two-button closing. The neckline is devoid of collar and is simply outlined by a 2-inch fold of black satin which crosses over to one side, effecting a diagonal closing line on the waist part of the coat. The sleeves are mannish, being set in without fullness; in place of the cuff there is a trimming of three buttons and a smart frill of hemstitched lawn. The skirt, made with a raised waist-line, shows a slight increase in fullness at bottom, according to the latest designs, and is slashed high on one side over an inset piece of serge handsomely braided in black soutache. The slash is outlined by black crochet buttons and loops similar to those used on the coat. The simple lines of this model make it adaptable to the spring silk suitings and the linens and crashes. asked for the little luxuries of dress are usually prohibitive and so the girl whose pennies must do the work of dollars calls upon her ten fingers to fashion for her the latest fancies.

For the long, slender throat the "choker," seen at the bottom of the page, is both light and airy, being made of plaited white tulle on a boned lining of net; the binding bands are of satin with smart flat little bows and a row of minute buttons to match. The cuffs are made in the same manner. This set made up in fine net would be quite as smart as the tulle and more practical because of being so easily cleaned.

The glorified sailor collar in the sketch in the opposite corner is made up of old-fashioned, hand-embroidered, turn-over collar and cuffs and the lace ends of old veils, so search your treasure boxes and bring forth the cherished bits of real lace and fine embroidery. Cut a collar of paper, fitting it carefully about the neck-line. The outer edge may be temporarily shaped as a wide deep sailor. Arrange the lace and embroidery on the pattern according to the design here given or to suit one's own fancy, as different materials will necessarily require different designs. After having planned the placing of the lace set, baste them wrong side up on the pattern and proceed to sew the edges together.

TOUCHING UP OLD FROCKS

Another pretty novelty is pictured at the bottom of page 44 that would quite transform a simple blouse. Pompadour ribbon or silk by the yard with its edge finished by a narrow band of contrasting velvet would be charming and inexpensive. Strands of the velvet or chenille form the fringe. The side frill may be of white lace or Alençon tulle.

There is nothing like the revived fichu to give a new-old look to plainly made frocks. The one illustrated in the upper right corner of this page was seen on a young woman dressed in mourning. Her gown was exceedingly simple and owed its distinction entirely to this charming trifle and the pair of dainty cuffs. The foundation collar was of white chiffon which formed a turn-over collar edged with a frill of sheer black net and the half-inch, up-turned hem of white chiffon was ornamented by black French knots. A hem of black net with the same treatment of knots finished the lower edge of the collar.

BECOMING BOUDOIR CAP

A pretty cap for morning wear over loosely dressed hair is made of four motifs, bluntly triangular, arranged to form a square. A plaited frill of linen edged with lace graduates from each side of the front motif to a depth of six inches at the back. The front and side medallions are joined just at the points to allow pale blue satin ribbon to pass under the front motif, bind in the plaits a bit, and tie in a bow at the back with long ends. (See illustration on page 43.)

WAISTS FROM LACE SCRAPS

Odd pieces of lace can be used to advantage by the clever girl in constructing one of those lace blouses that look so well with the coat suit. An old lace scarf was utilized for the right waist of the group. The ends of the scarf form the little basque in front and back and if there is enough lace left it also is used for the slightly full undersleeve which is joined to the short kimono sleeve below the shoulder. If the supply of lace is limited, net the same tone as the lace is substituted. The shallow yoke is of net outlined with folds of yellow mousseline, which lines the entire blouse. The large bow and narrow revers below are of yellow satin. The other waist on page 43 was of lace flouncing taken from an old dinner gown. The satin bow and chiffon vest ornamented with a row of pearl buttons should be of the same color as the skirt with which the blouse is worn.

A small length of lace was called into service as the sole trimming of a white crêpe de Chine blouse seen below. After it was accordion plaited, it was discovered that there was not enough for the collarless neck and deep wrist frills over the hands, so the neck frill had to be shortened, leaving the front open. However, this gave a newer touch and was just as effective. Small ballshaped buttons made of the lace went from elbow to wrist of the sleeves and also appeared on the waist front.

ENTER THE HUMBLE CLOTHES-LINE

Untwist an ordinary clothes-line, not too light in color, and dampen three plies to plait and press; these are then worked with the fingers until flexible enough to use. The designing possibilities are many and are based on hempcolored net; rows, circles, squares, buttons, loops, and girdles with self-fringe, are suggestions. The origin of this curious trimming was seen on the dull lavender model sketched at the top of page 43. The hempen braid is sewed crisscross between two rows an inch and one-half apart and serves to ornament the coat in the attractive manner illustrated.

UTILIZING AN INDIAN SCARF

At this same shop was displayed a wonderfully soft colored Indian handprint négligée, totally different from the one described above, but really quite as simple to make. Originally a scarf, some two and a half yards in length and twenty-one inches in width, it was used in one piece and cleverly draped. There was an inch and a half tuck on each shoulder which was stitched to the depth of five inches back and front; an inch and a half on each side of the center back was allowed for the wedgeshaped piece, which was caught with a few threads to the side edges of the scarf at the base of the neck, to give the folds silks, which are sold by the yard from fifty cents up. The upholstery departments often have the Oriental squares and scarfs similar to the one used, both in silk and cotton, and incidentally many other perfectly beautiful materials, guimpes, braids, etc., which, though designed for furnishings, have many wardrobe possibilities when adapted by clever fingers.

RICH IN EFFECT, BUT MODEST IN PRICE

One of the most serviceable, and at the same time dainty, materials for tea gowns and matinées is the silk and cotton mixtures one finds in every shop, Purchasable in an infinite variety of color, both plain and figured, a particularly lovely shade is of dull yellow that has all the appearance of cloth of gold-It loses none of its luster or color in washing, if pressed when dry, and will look like new until absolutely worn out. Of this material is made a negligée in three pieces—the two skirt portions and the upper piece. The amount of goods required is but five yards at twenty-nine cents per yard; two yards of wide tan or natural-colored machine Cluny lace, from ten to fifteen cents a yard; two yards of narrow orange velvet ribbon for flat little bows, forty cents; and a ball of dull yellow mercerized cotton for French knots. That is all, and one's outlay has amounted to the sum of two dollars and twenty cents. The fourth sketch at the top of page 43 gives one 50 good an idea of the design in detail that there is need of but little description; The skirt is narrow, measuring a scant two and one-half yards, at the hem, which has a short pointed train, the seam coming in center back. The highwaisted kimono body part is in one piece and the waist-line is corded and finished with a narrow plaited frill. If a sleeve below the elbow is desired, one must add a piece, but do not seam in the usual way. Turn a half-inch hem on the lower piece and overlap the up" per, and in place of stitching use close clusters of large French knots, which method has no suggestion of piecing. The front opening is hemmed back one inch and has as a finish the clusters of knots. To make these use a double strand, a large needle and three turns of magic, giving a nice touch of hand-work.

Collar, cuffs and buttons of lace give an air of novelty to an old blouse

Another "Nothing-a-Year" girl having purchased a Nattier blue voile remnant, faced the problem of making it up for the cost of the voile alone. Her much over-worked scrap bag revealed only some small odd-shaped pieces of red allover embroidery on tan mull. Carefully piecing together a long narrow length, she took it to a most modest shop where the graceful effect seen in the above it was accordion plaited for the equally drawing. Two tassels of Oriental origin modest sum of five cents and the plait- weighted the hem and were placed ten ing served to hide the piecing. Other inches apart. SEENONTHE STAGE

If any man remain who doubts that Otis Skinner is an incomparably fine actor, in fact, the best in America to-day, let him hie him at once to see "Kismet," the Arabian Nights entertainment by Edward Knoblauch, into which Harrison Grey Fiske has poured the full store of his inventiveness, and towards which countless other energies have gone to make an apex to the season of 1911-12.

Mr. Skinner is to Mr. Knoblauch and Mr. Fiske as Charity to Faith and Hope. Without him, they are nothing. The author has a very pleasant little idea, well worked out. A beggar, dozing by the roadside, under the corner of an entrance to a Mosque, is flung a purse of gold. It lands him in some fairly picturesque difficulties, the most important of which is his imprisonment for an attempt on the life of the Grand Caliph.

AN EVENTFUL DAY FOR HAJJ

betrothes his daughter, without her consent, to the Wazir Mansur, and repents him of his folly and tries to get her back; he all but assassinates the Grand Caliph, murders outright the ancient enemy of his house and the son of that enemy; and at nightfall cuddles back into his corner, penniless and under edict of banishment from the Grand Caliph. There he sleeps till dawn sees him faring forth to Mecca in expiation.

Mr. Knoblauch has had the good sense to cling to a certain formal simplicity in the unfolding of his tale. Then, too, he has quite nicely adapted it to modern audiences. This may be due to his Precise discrimination, and it may be due to his own inability to catch entirely the spirit of the Arabian Nights. We cannot presume to determine. We are only forced into the ungraciousness of mentioning at all the more unpleasant of the two hypotheses because Mr. Knoblauch has fallen from his own consistency. He asks us to regard the murders in the true Eastern spirit, as somewhat a matter of course—no great occasion, at best. But along with his casual murders he gives us romantic love at its fiercest flame, and asks us to eye it even as the New Paganists eye Aphrodite and her retinue.

THE AUTHOR'S INCONSISTENCIES

Perhaps he was clever enough to know that we would follow him in his murders, and balk at the brazenness of his Oriental loves. Perhaps he did not him utterly when tried by the test of Mansur with thanksgiving in her heart. Thought that we would not. There is no might even, upon sound second thought, judge him by his play, he has skillfully, East truthfully, set forth the storied

East, and only those who know their Thousand Nights and One" will ever was to do.

THE LAURELS FOR STAGE CRAFT TO MR. FISKE

For Mr. Fiske, his missed is soon dishim the laurel ther ado. He has important and the duction of the Ameryear of Our Lord when every stage manager is having his fling at great pictorial effects, Mr. Fiske comes into the competition with a matchless series of street scenes and interiors which earn him first honors without a struggle. He has been discerning enough to ". stay safely within the limitations of stage production, and has not striven to unroll the blue dome of heaven and the waste spaces of the Sahara desert on a few canvas curtains. While one speaks with all reverence for George C. Tyler, Mr.

Fiske's only important rival, one none the less recognizes that he flouted the notion that stage production, like other arts, had its hard and fast boundary lines, and that his splendid failure, however great matter for sorrow, was well deserved. In every scene in "Kismet," and there were seven, there was complete and satisfying fulfilment of the underlying effort, and one left them wholly content with oneself and Mr. Fiske.

FOR MR. SKINNER A SOLEMN SALAAM

And now for Mr. Skinner. The impulse is to make him three solemn salaams, and retire from his presence in a deeply respectful silence, leaving to others the duty of recounting the things that make him great. But concession to these modest incitements is no part for a critic, and if we are to get on in the world, we must stammer out our reasons, and let who will jibe at our presumption.

After all, the task is not so difficult. A few of the things that distinguish Mr. Skinner he learned early in life, and has probably half forgotten that he knows. For instance, his speech is delicious, every syllable pure as crystal, and his gestures are superb. These things are likely as not automatic with him now, and have no share in the glory peculiar to "Kismet," but they help him mightily, and are a magnificent foundation.

Felice Lyne; a young American prima donna; who has had a great success in London

What he does in "Kismet" is a kind of glorified harangue, which he has got by means operatic rather than dramatic. He has what the opera singers know as flawless "breath control," and he phrases his lines with the self-same command of his extremely well-behaved diaphragm that Mme. Gadski has, for example, or Leo Slezak. The result is a sort of levitation of the entire rôle. He has no

"full stops," no periods of inactivity. When he ceases to speak, it is as if he arrested his full, free voice in mid-air, and as if he had only stopped at all because it became necessary to give leave to speak in some other quarter. This simple trick of emphasis and intonation grasps "Kismet" firmly under the armpits and holds it bouncingly upward when interest has long since been lost in Mr. Fiske's fine scenery and Mr. Knoblauch's straggling incidents.

FORCE

Further, it gives to Mr. Skinner an air of immense vitality, and bounding energy, which some of his reviewers have rather slightingly called "old school braggadocio." True, sometimes he seems rather a swaggerer and swashbuckler. That is what has this long time been known as an "Otis Skinner part," and since we cannot at present recall any other actor who knows how to swagger prettily, we suppose that such parts have been rather thrust upon him than deliberately chosen. However, the fact that he has done it a great many times before is no potent reason that we can see for omitting it when the part calls for it, and Hajj, the beggar, is preeminently brash. Space does not permit us to dwell at any length on Mr. Skinner's humor, his tenderness, his delectable impudence. Anyway, these are to the author's credit, since they should be, if they are not, inherent in the role.

The company is not remarkable, one way or the other. Rita Jolivet, the new leading woman, has little charm, but some ability. Hamilton Revelle mouths his words. Fred Eric looks like a British 'squire at a fancy dress ball.

THE LACKAYE PLAYERS

Wilton Lackaye and his Players began what they promise will be a season of repertoire at the Bijou Theatre, with a piece by Charles Dazey called "The Stranger." The title was singularly inappropriate, since never before did a play haul out so many old friends from the sum total of dramatic situations as did this balderdash "comedy drama."

First there was the scion of an aristocratic southern house, who was about to have his home sold over his head for debts, and his daughter, in New York, writing successful stories for magazines. There was the poorhouse boy, exiled in youth by the cruelty of the aristocrats, who had gone to New York and become successful on his Titanic merits, and who returned to his native town under an alias to reinstate himself in public esteem. Then there was the discovery that the "poorhouse waif" who bore the stigma of illegitimacy, was in reality the first-born son of an old rapscallion of the aristocracy who was persecuting him, and that the erstwhile honored son of this old gentleman was in reality the illegitimate son. And last, but not least, the newly-fathered Titan was wrongfully accused of a terrible crime, of which he had been made to seem guilty by a distortion of what was in reality an act of sublime beneficence. Finally, after much rancorous discussion, everything was straightened out, and the good old man had his ancestral estates given back to him, minus the mortgage, and the bad old man was made to feel sorry for his sins, and the bad young man was evicted from the township, and disgraced, and the good young man, of the many vicissitudes, discovered to his amazement that he was truly loved by the good young lady who went to New York and wrote pieces for the magazines.

Fancy a fine actor like Wilton Lackaye struggling along with such piffle. It was a saddening spectacle. He did his best, and he all but performed the miracle of making the play seem worth while. Miss Muriel Starr, his leading lady, did some very creditable work, but Malcolm Williams mistook the temper of the southern aristocrat, even a villainous one, and played him like a malevolent "po' white."

MISS FERGUSON'S COMEDY

"The First Lady of the Land," by Charles Nirdlinger, has served Elsie Ferguson a good turn at the Gaiety Theatre, by giving her ways and means to prove that she qualifies as an actress on other scores than personal charm and prettiness. We are so bold as to think her characterization of Dolly Madison is at fault, in that it leans to boldness, and a rather coarse impertinence, but for what she thinks the character to be, she plays it cleverly and well.

Mr. Nirdlinger's comedy has many smart lines, an unusual portion for the modern American play. It fails in its third act crisis, because it is literally impossible, from that scene or those antecedent, to discover whether Dolly Todd really loves Jimmie Madison and is sorry for Ronnie Burr, or whether her love and her judgment, seriously at odds, lead her to take Madison for a husband, and forego her love for Burr. In fact, all through the play, this uncertainty persists, and it so happens that Frederick Perry is sufficiently charming as Aaron Burr, and Lowell Sherman sufficiently irritating as Madison, to keep us wrought to the fever pitch of eagerness that she will, after all, defy history and marry Burr. Dramatic suspense is all very fine, and we are the last to recommend to Mr. Nirdlinger any actual abstinence in its use, but when it results in utter confusion, and is only got at the expense of dramatic clarity, we think it might be more sparingly used.

One excellent feature of "The First Lady of the Land" which deserves praise is that there pervades it, and the company which plays it, an air of true elegance and social distinction. Without this, it would lose a full half its charm.

"BEN HUR" REVIVED

"Ben Hur" will tell you how old you are, physically and spiritually. If its thundering chariots, and rocking slave ships, its exalted hosannas and waving palms, do not catch your imagination, and quicken your blood, then you might as well begin to cast about you for the joys of middle age. You have seen it before, and you marvel that it can have deteriorated so in the ten or twelve years since it commanded your admiration.

But look at the pair of youngsters next to you, who are seeing it for the first time? There is the febrile enthusiasm you lack. There is the real audience for "Ben Hur," and it is for them that this elaborate revival at the New Amsterdam Theatre has been made. It is perfectly useless to rail at the play. The fault lies nearer home. "Ben Hur" is for the younger generation, and those who dare to view it with youth already in the rear guard can count on being punished in the line of their sins.

NEW OPERA COMPANY

"The Wedding Trip" at the Broadway Theatre, with music by Reginald de Koven and book by Fred de Gresac and Harry B. Smith, is interesting chiefly because it introduces the members of a company that is to be made permanent, for the giving of light opera. It is a well rounded, agreeable conpany, and we greet it with the profound hope that it will presently have more interesting material than "The Wedding Trip."

WOMAN AND WOMANHOOD: A SEARCH FOR PRINCIPLES, by C. W. Saleeby, M.D., F.R.S.E., Ch.B., F.Z.S., Fellow of the Obstetrical Society of Edinburgh and formerly Resident Physician in the Edinburgh Maternity Hospital, is an able treatment of modern feminism. Every woman who has been influenced by the current hysteria of the feminist movement should read this sane and genuinely learned book. Dr. Saleeby is no undiscriminating enemy of many things demanded by those who seek to change some of the relations of women to society; he deals with the whole problem in a large, learned and tolerant spirit, without passion or prejudice, with abundant sympathy, but without cheap sentimentality, and he presents his arguments unclouded by a swarm of showy catch phrases. One need not share the author's apparent expectation of human perfection on this planet in order to sympathize with his detailed treatment of his great subject. So we may take seriously or cast aside his speculations as to the possibility of developing something like a third sex, without rejecting his practical discussion of the physical training of girls, education for motherhood, the marriage age of girls, choosing a husband, the conditions of marriage, and the rights of mothers, upon all of which topics he presents much well-digested discussion. He shows the highest sanity in his discussion of women and economics. It is satisfactory to find a man who accepts a good deal that socialism teaches, insisting that "we must not admit the smallest infringement of the supreme principle that every human being is an end in himself or herself, and that the worth of society is to be found in the worth and happiness of the individuals who compose it." Dr. Saleeby's book is not addressed to prudes, for it is courageously radical and plain spoken. Its style is neither dull nor flippant, but clear, vigorous and restrained. WHEN NEIGHBORS WERE NEIGHBORS: A STORY OF LOVE AND LIFE IN OLDEN DAYS, by Galusha Anderson, S.T.D., LL.D., Professor Emeritus in the University of Chicago, is an old man's simple and naïve attempt at self-expression in the form of reminiscences of his boyhood in the Middle West of seventy years ago. In style it is unpretentious, almost boyish, but in matter it is abundantly rich, for it tells in great detail of a society now long vanished. The daily occupations of a simple community, the school life of country boys and girls, the religious customs of the people, politics, recreations and the like, all find their place in these interesting pages. An extremely striking chapter is that which deals with the Millerite preaching of Christ's second coming in 1843. Well drawn illustrations add to the value of the text.: (Boston: Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company, $1.20 net.)

TODDIE: THE ROMANCE OF A WOMAN HATER, by GILBERT WATSON, is a thoroughly delightful book from beginning to end. It has delicious humor, genuine pathos and passion. Toddie himself is a most charming creation, and Devina is a creature of singularly large lines. The gentlefolk are well enough also, but they cut no great figure beside these two representatives of humble Scotch life. Bob, the dog, deserves an honorable place in the small but distinguished gallery of dogs in fiction. He is sympathetic, humorous, faithful and loving. Toddy's talks with Bob are illuminating and delightfully humorous. The moral of the book, not preached didactically, but conveyed by the logic of events, is the necessity to every creature of having something to love, something to place ahead of self, to idealize and cherish. (New York: The Century Company, $1.20 net.)

THE LOG OF THE EASY WAY, by John L. Mathews, illustrated from photographs by the author, is a volume of nearly 300 pages with many illustrations. It recounts a journey in a small boat from Chicago by way of the Drainage Canal and the Illinois river to the Mississippi, and thence to New Orleans. He was accompanied by his new wife, and the journey was their honeymooning. It is a pleasant story of mild adventure with occasional dangers that he narrates very effectively. FROM CONSTANTINOPLE TO THE HOME OF OMAR KHAY-YAM is a book of travels in Transcaucasia and Northern Persia for historic and literary research, containing more than two hundred illustrations and a map, by A. V. WILLIAMS JACKSON, Professor of Indo-iranian languages and sometime Professor of the English Language and Literature in Columbia University. Professor Jackson, who combines studious investigation in his linguistic specialty with observation of persons and places in his travels, has written this notable book on the journey from Constantinople to the home of the Persian poet. The author will pardon a reference to the somewhat amazing confusion of phrase in the very opening sentence of his book, which reads, "A Charity Ball and a journey to the East seem to have little connection, yet so they had in the case of the third of my four visits to the Land of Dawn." The general style of the volume is not to be judged from this trifling error in logical expression; the book is, on the whole, written in good narrative style, with some happy description and no little humor. It cannot be said that Professor Jackson shows special lyric gift in translating Persian poetry. In the earlier part of his journeying he trespassed upon the land of Loti; it is a daring traveler who can come back from such an adventure and give his own impressions in competition with the brilliant French sailor. It is interesting to learn from Professor Jackson that Fridusi paraphrased the "Non omnis moriar" of Horace in speaking of the fama superstes to be expected of his verse. Professor Jackson is able to enjoy not only the antiquities of the Orient, but to appreciate its practical side, as one may see from the space that he gives to the oil business of Baku. The book was written too early to concern itself with the present war between Turkey and Italy, but the author does give some attention to recent movements in Persia. (New York: the Macmillan Company, $3.50.)

MONA: AN OPERA IN THREE ACTS, is a poem by Brian Hooker with music by Horatio Parker. Brian Hooker's poem is a Briton-Roman story, and Mona is a British princess. The scene is in southwestern Britain, the time about the end of the first Christian century and in the earlier days of the Roman occupation. The blank verse of the poem is effective, and there are remarkable poetical passages of description, while the conversation of the characters is ably conveyed. The lyric portions seem somewhat less successful. As a whole, the libretto is far above the average quality of such things as we hear them upon the operatic stage. Here is a descriptive passage of extraordinary power:

"I walked up a windy beach between Dark forest and dim sea. Low-swollen clouds,

Heavy with storm, gloomed overhead and hung

Bellying against the tree-tops. Close ashore

Towered one huge wave, curving over me As serpent curves to strike, crested with cloud

And foam, the hollow gulf beneath alive With tremulous lights and angry glints of green

High overhead looming, so that I seemed To walk in a long cavern roofed with cloud,

And walled with foam and forest." (New York: Dodd, Mead Company, $1.25 net.)

SCULPTURE IN SPAIN, by AL-BERT F. CALVERT, is a comprehensive treatment of this branch of the subject. Mr. Calvert declares in his introduction that the Spanish character expressed itself far more forcibly in sculpture than in painting. While the importance of the Spanish sculpture lies mainly in ecclesiastical work, he shows that there was an early sculptural art in Spain that preceded the Christian era by more than four centuries. His second chapter deals with early sculpture, but unfortunately his illustrations give no notion of the powerful pre-Christian work of this style. It is to the altars and the exterior of churches that we must go for the best extant sculpture. Architectural statuary is notably beautiful; so, too, is the wood carving that decorates the interiors of so many churches. The decline of Spanish sculpture dates from the later years of the seventeenth century and the early years of the eighteenth century. (London: John Lane, The Bodley Head; New York: John Lane Company, $1.50.)

PINS AND PINCUSHIONS, by E. D. LONGMAN and S. LOCH, is a sumptuous volume dealing historically and otherwise with that dangerous instrument and weapon, the pin. The first chapter treats historically of the pin from the earliest times to the present day. Subsequent chapters deal with superstitions about pins, games with pins, pins of many kinds, the use of the pin in the fine arts, the use of the pin as a weapon, pins in poetry, and so on into many details. The final chapter many illustrations of the book are important adjuncts to the text. Several plates show pin-pricked pictures. (Longmans, Green & Co., 39 Paternoster Row, London; New York, Bombay and Calcutta, $3.50 net.)

MOTHER: A STORY, by KATH-LEEN NORRIS, is a little tale that seems to be the work of a novice, but it has the qualities of faithful realism and genuine pathos somewhat rare in current fiction. The plot is conventional throughout, the style is marred by crudities, and the story at moments takes on somewhat the tone of a tract, but what is genuine in the work triumphs over all these defects and entitles it to the name of literature. Miss Norris shows herself thoroughly at home in the country school and in the village homestead, but she seems to betray unfamiliarity in her scenes from urban life, and she plays sad havoc at times with her great lady. The moral note is too strongly sounded in many places. The real heroine of the piece, she of the title rôle, is a genuine creation. The home scenes in the village also are deliciously true. If Miss Norris can remain strong and true in these points, chasten her style, and teach herself to see sanely and clearly other aspects of life than those that she appears to have known from infancy, she may produce something much more worth while. Meanwhile let her learn not to say "secure a position" when she means "obtain a place," and let her drop once and for all from her vocabulary the word "thoroughbred" as applied to human beings. (New York: the Macmillan Company, $1.)

THAN FROME, by EDITH WHAR-TON, is a new story in which Mrs. Wharton has been fortunate in finding or manufacturing one of those bleak and terrible tales of human soul-starvation such as are told as of local occurrence in not a few rural New England communities, and whether the plot be invention in whole or in part, or approximately a transcript from actual human experience, the author has clothed it in a most moving guise. No sensitive person can read this tale of poverty, starved affections, and bitter living on after all that makes life sweet is lost, without being haunted by its thrilling tragedy. A tale this to make one think and feel, to puzzle and disturb, yet to instruct and humanize, to lesson the reader in charity and to soften his heart, as the famous formula goes, "with terror and pity." (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, $1 net.)

MARGERY, by E. F. Benson, is a characteristically workmanlike story by the man who first attracted wide attention with his rather audacious "Dodo," and who now has more than two dozen novels to his credit. Mr. Benson is at his best in English upper-class life of the present time, and "Margery" is a tale of such a setting done with sufficient realism, and with ingenuity of plot and incident such as will hold the attention of the reader. (New York: deals with pincushions. The Doubleday, Page & Co., $1.20 net.)

MORNING IN THE LONDON SHOPS

Pale and Somber Colors, Yes, But One Must not Omit the Dash of Brilliant Color that Gives Chic-A Shop Where Lame and Blind Children Make the Bouquets that Finish All Dress Accessories borrow from Covent Garden Market and filch fashions from gardening papers," an artistic modiste said to me one day last week, as one of her manikins revolved before me in a mist of gray chiffon and silver lace. Then addressing the girl, "Very nice, Germaine, but too etherial. Bring me the flower box. This is what it needs to make it a dream."

She drew out two trim bouquets of red and orange roses, tucked one into the silver belt and pinned another on the gray tulle bandeau which enfolded a mass of sunny curls.

"It is the finishing touch," I said. She smiled at me across her basket of flowers. "Yes, the splash of color gives the gown an atmosphere. I have always insisted upon it. One may wear pale and somber shades, but somewhere there must be a splash of brilliant primal colors or their complementary tints. Color gives life. Germaine was depressing in gray and silver. The optimistic note is given by the rose-scented flowers."

There seemed to be truth in these words. As the front door closed gently behind me and I passed from the warmth and color into the chill discomfort of a London Square, washed clean and colorless by downpours of rain, I decided to see if the shopkeepers agreed with this clever dressmaker.

As I hurried on I felt a sudden tug at my sleeve.

"Please, Madam, will you accept this little bunch of flowers? Your dress looks dark without a buttonhole bouquet."

The same note the couturière had struck! I turned and saw a cripple girl holding out a small box containing a bunch of violets, so like the reality as to make me touch to be sure.

"Where did you get them?" I asked the child.

"We make them ourselves, Madam, in a big factory which a clergyman started for us. Some of us are cripples, some are blind, and all day long we make pretty bunches of flowers which look as real as if you picked them out of your garden. They brighten up ladies' dresses so prettily. No," as I offered a coin, "there is no charge, Madam. We give these little bunches free and then the ladies come and watch us work."

I tucked the soft purple blossoms in my fur and left the child with a promise that I would go to visit her flower factory as soon as I could.

A TRIM RAINY-DAY SUIT

The first tailor I visited with a query as to wet-weather clothes met me with the same pleasing theory of cheerfulness and color-dark shades, strong textures, clean cut, absence of ornamentation and just a touch of brilliant color in the boutonnière and on the somber, weatherproof hat.

His latest model, sketched here, is a convincing application of his theory. It would be a real rainy-weather friend or excellent for a brisk walk along frozen country roads or for skating. The graceful skirt is neither hobble nor hooped. London breathes free now that the hoop skirt was born and died in a day, after appearing on a few models. The one touch of trimming in the costume is the row of smoke-pearl buttons just above the hem of the skirt on the left side and on the three-quarter coat. The material is a gray diagonal tweed, one of those soft, woolly qualities which the Highland women weave at their cottage doors. The collar, like the little hat, is of gray weatherproof suede. The large side pockets with buttoned flaps are well in evidence. The splash of color is in the boutonnière of dull green leaves and red and purple blossoms, a second bunch of which relieves the Quaker sobriety of the hat. The price was 4½ guineas.

"And are you selling little buttonholes with all your tailor-made costumes?" I asked.

"But, certainly, Madame," he replied. "Your London is a cold city. You need the little flowers."

NOVEL FLOWER ACCESSORIES

The "little flowers" seem to be the most popular feature of the London shops at present. Here is a knot of wild blooms seemingly culled from autumn hedges, still brown and dusty; wee buttercups, dandelions gone to gossamer powder-puffs, miniature thistles which can draw blood from an unwary finger, all crushed together in a wildflower bouquet. And just beyond is a little cluster of blue with red, yellow, gold, silver, sapphire or copper leaves. These are pinned at the side of a ribbon bandeau, attached to the handle of a fan or to a muff, or even stitched on one slipper, while the fellow is adorned with a paste buckle. These tiny buttonholes vary in price from 9d. to 10s. 6d.

Another novelty is the "flower necklet," made to meet the need of those who like to wear the low collars and yet dislike the bare throat. The "flower necklets" are made of narrow black velvet ribbon, clipped at the back with a patent fastener. On the center front is fixed a tiny bouquet of parti-colored dwarf berries or flowers in the brightest of colors. These sell for 1s.

HORTICULTURAL JEWELRY

In jewelry, too, the flower theme predominates. A new pendant is in the form of a gold band, from the center of which hangs a bunch of berries with the leaves tinted with pale green enamel and each berry a jewel. The price is 30s.

Here fiancés often give little pledges of faith and understanding before the engagement is formally announced. Just place as an engagement present. The favorite pendant consists of a blue ring, across the top of which hangs a festoon of diamond forget-me-nots with tiny pearl drops falling from the flowers; this is attached to the ring by tiny diamond true lover's knots, and the pendant is hung from a fine gold chain set with pearls. Price, £8.

A pair of diamond flower earrings often completes this engagement present. They are in the shape of a slender trellis work of gold bordered with blue enamel; over this trellis climbs a tiny cluster of diamond forget-me-nots. These pretty ornaments cost £10 5s. a pair.

Circles of flowers are popular for brooches. Forget-me-nots of turquoise, violets in deep purple amethysts, iilies in pearls and peridots priced at £1, and sometimes a shilling or two lower, are exquisite; flower earrings to match cost £1 16s. 6d. a pair. One lovely circular brooch of lilies-of-the-valley consisted of diamond leaves with pearls for the lily bells. Price, £4 2s. 6d.

Flower rings, consisting of a single bloom of jewels set on a gold or platinum band, vary in price according to the gems. A water-lily ring of opals and olivines costs £2 17s. 6d.

LITTLE FADS AND FANCIES

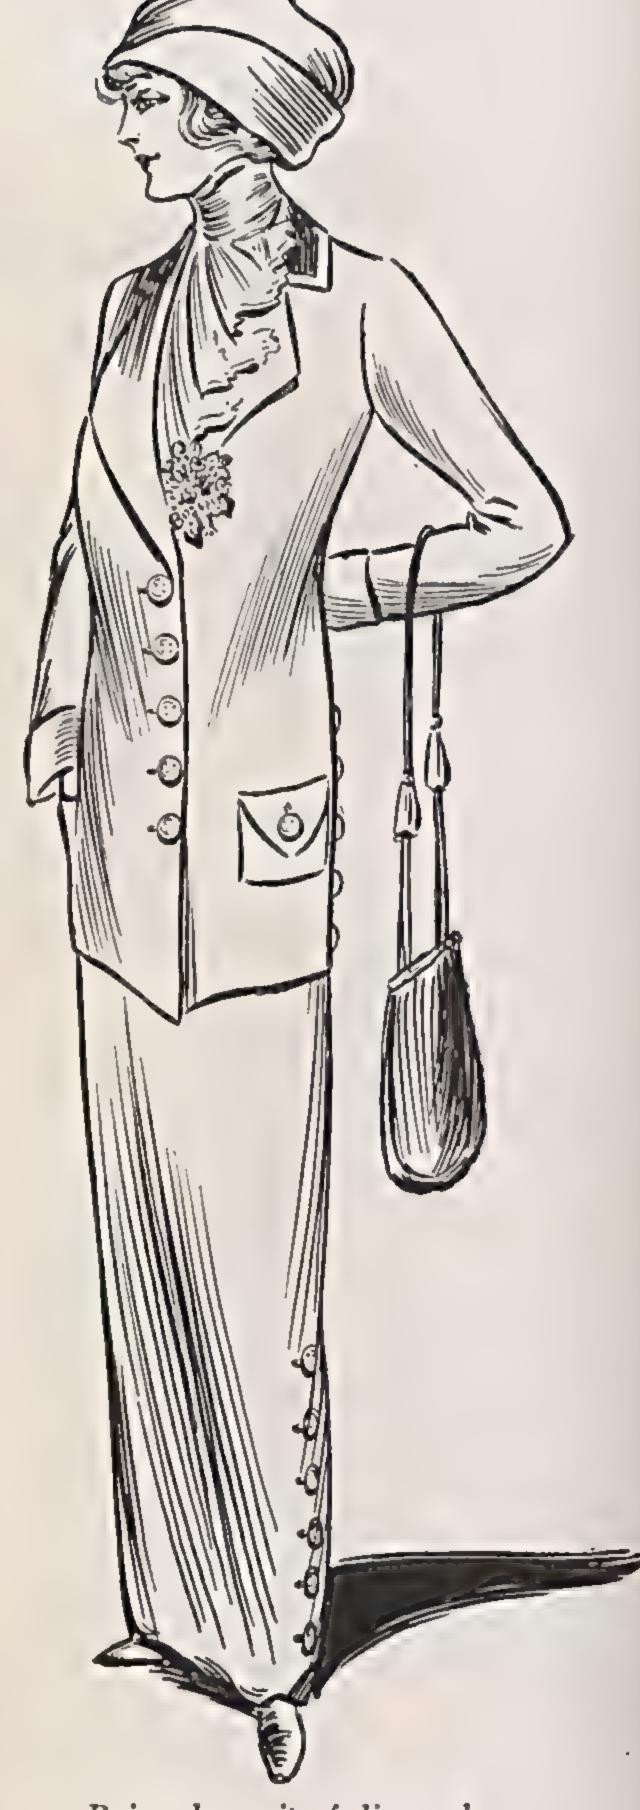

A recent novelty is a breakfast "egg cosy" made of the finest white lawn and cosily wadded. The cover is embroidered with delicate clusters of white marguerites with their feathery foliage. Price, 6s. 9d. White linen tea cosies are very popular. They are priced from 16s. 9d. to 30s. One pretty example of moderate cost was embroidered with white garden daisies and true lover's knots.

Some really exquisite perfumes have lately come to us. White clover is a delicate scent which reminds one of country fields on a warm, June afternoon. Our old friend the "Evening scented stock" under a new, musical sounding title is becoming one of the most popular odors of some years. These perfumes are sold in small bottles for 1s. 8d., or in larger bottles for from five shillings to a guinea.

Glove sachets have come to stay. These are not, as the title seems to imply, to be laid away among one's gloves in their satin case. They are to slip in the palm of the glove when it is worn, and so to spread their fragrance on the air.

WHERE BLIND CHILDREN MAKE FLOWERS

After leaving the glamor of the shops at the moment the pendant holds first I started for the factory of which my purple bouquet constantly reminded me. My muddy pilgrimage was well repaid. The kindly pastor himself led the way through dark, stone passages into the fairylands of color where the flowers are made. It was an extraordinary place, where the blind and deformed learn to be bread-winners. The room held long tables heaped with leaves and petals,

Rainy-day suit of diagonal tweed prepared for wet weather by collar and hat of suède which they combine into blossoms; at each table sat the children and the older girls. Other rooms were noisy with the mutter of the machinery which cutsthese flower petals out of muslin, lawn, silk or satin. The hands of some of the girls were stained brilliantly with dye. In the drying rooms, damply warm as a conservatory, roses, violets, lilies. and carnations lie side by side with drooping, wet leaves until they are crispand dry.

The crippled, the blind and the dwarfsare seated in a certain order. Here wasa blind girl arranging exquisite La France roses and Parma violets into a bouquet for the Court gown of a wellknown society woman. A bright-faced little girl with only one arm sat near the blind worker.

"Now rose petals," whispered the blind girl, and the thin hand of the cripple gathered for her a handful of rosy petals.

"Now violets and their stalks," came: the command, and again the thin arm.

executed the order.

Finally I was taken into the Sale Department, a treasury of flowers that cannot die. Here fashionable women come. to buy their bouquets, buttonholes, wreathes for the hair and garnitures for evening gowns. The prices range from sixpence upwards, and each child earns. quite a comfortable little weekly sum towards keeping a poor home going. It is one of our London shops which leaves. a kindly, gentle feeling in the heart of E. K. the shopper.

How to Ruin a Dish of Beans

Would it pay us—and does it pay you— To spoil this dish for a cent or two?

F one wants to skimp, or if one doesn't care, it is easy to spoil baked beans.

Take the beans as they come. Don't stop to pick out just the ripest and plumpest—beans all of one size.

Use a sauce made of low-grade green, or of scraps from a canning factory.

Bake in dry heat, and too quickly. Some will then be crisped, some broken and mushy, and all will be hard to digest.

In homes and in factories. millions of meals are spoiled in such ways.

OES it pay? One may save, perhaps, a few pennies per meal. But think what one loses.

Beans are 84 per cent. nutriment — more nutritious than meat. They cost one-third as much. Does it pay to make them uninviting?

And is any food worth eating if it can't digest?

TE know that it isn't. So we buy choice beans, and pick out the finest among them. They cost us last year an average of $2.45 per bushel.

We make our sauce from Livingston Stone tomatoes, ripened on the vines. It costs us five tomatoes -- of tomatoes picked times what common sauce sells for—just to get a superlative zest.

> We bake in high heat, and bake in small parcels so the full heat goes through. Thus the beans are made digestible.

> We bake in steam ovens, so the beans come out nut-like, mealy and whole.

> And we bake the tomato sauce with the pork and the beans, so the flavor and zest go through.

> TS it expensive? The materials are. But we bake for a million homes, so we save on the baking.

> Your home-baked beans cost a little more, if you figure the fuel and sauce.

> Some factory-baked beans cost a little less. You can learn by one meal if that skimping pays. A million homes know that it doesn't.

"The National Dish"

Note that Van Camp's Beans now outsell all other brands together.

Note that a million housewives who used to bake beans now let our chefs bake for them.

That is due to the fact that no other kitchen bakes beans that compare with 'Van Camp's.

You will know this when you try them.

"La Société Nouvelle" of France Has Visiting Exhibition of Paintings from the Luxembourg—Now in Chicago

HEN a group of one hundred Other exhibits which have greatly atsome thirty-five sculptures, country has accomplished, becomes available, it would seem as though comcities to secure an exhibition of it- nunzio. this independently of the artist's nationality and of the public's personal more commonly designated as Société preferences.

There happens to be in this country such a group of works of art representing modern French art in its healthiest and broadest aspect, works as far removed from Bougereau's candy maidens as from "cubisme" à la Mathisse. Yet prevent the Société Nouvelle from asnot in New York, Boston, Philadelphia suming a receptive attitude to whatever or Washington has any eagerness been discoveries have been made by the most manifested to see that collection of paintings and sculptures, which comprises works by Rodin, J. W. Alexander, Besnard, Aman-Jean, Jacques Blanche, Carrière, Cottet, La Gandara, La Touche, Lazare, Le Sidaner, Henry Martin, Raffaelli and Troubetzkoy.

MISS SAGE ARRANGED EXHIBIT

Miss Cornelia Sage, the youthful director of the Albright Galleries in Buffalo, made arrangements in Paris last summer for exhibiting those paintings in America. She succeeded in convincing the very formal functionaries who preside over the Luxembourg Museum that the traditional rules should and could be broken; for the first time in the history of the Luxembourg, canvases have been loaned for exhibition abroad. This splendid collection has been shown a month in Buffalo, is now in Chicago and from there will go to St. Louis, being on view a month in each city; after which they will be shipped back to France.

The extraordinary indifference toward this collection shown by the artistic bodies in Eastern cities and by the French population is hardly explainable. This present endeavor to spread firsthand knowledge of contemporary French art to the United States bears no taint of commercialism, none of the paintings being for sale. Furthermore, while the organizers have not excluded from their list any shining light of the day, they have guarded themselves against the temptation to include works whose sensational character makes their value a matter of pure discussion as yet.

The mere mention of names such as Rodin, Besnard and Carrière is sufficient to remove any suggestion of faddism, of an experiment with doubtful element. This exhibition is, in fact, a comprehensive achievement.

ALBRIGHT GALLERIES FILLED

Six rooms of the Albright Academy Building were filled with the paintings, which were hung in a single line. One entire gallery was devoted to canvases by Carrière, whose works are shown for the friends curiously regarding her facial first time in this country. Blanche's conspicuous "Salome" crouching on a huddle of rich draperies occupied a prominent place on the center screen.

THE TERRORS OF THE SNAPSHOT

And speaking of England, I see that there is a reaction over there against taking snapshots at country house parties. An English critic in speaking of those fearful groups which are reproduced in the illustrated newspapers observed to a hostess, "I wish, Arabel, you could make them look nicer. Why do you let them be so bundly? I know you can't make people take things off much, but I wish to goodness, my dear, you would do one house party without any boas or stoles or anything around their necks." And from a victim comes the wail, "What faces we make, when we are not thinking, sometimes it appears when we are, and certainly when we are talking. The photograph of a vivacious woman generally shows a couple of gymnastics or look> ing blankly into the distance." I really think people of prominence should seriously consider that they are liable at any time to be photographed and should study a little to appear artistic without looking selfconscious. A hard thing to accomplish

IRST FIGURE (beginning at the top).—The Modart corset features the style which laces up the front. It has a medium bust and an extremely long skirt. This model is particularly liked by singers, as it gives such freedom of movement for the diaphragm.

Second Figure.—The Bon-ton model is extremely short in the bust, about four inches high, and has a long hip. It is specially made and adapted for the slight figure and for dancing. An elastic in- of black satin with wide revers, cuffs set either side of the front steel gives the really necessary fullness for the diaphragm. The manufacturers of this corset have very good models, designed for the medium and stout figure, but for a woman who can wear the style illustrated the much-desired uncorseted softness to the figure is given.

LEFT FIGURE.—Evening gown, in the loose, long-waisted, uncorseted style, of heavy white silk brocaded in a bowknot design of gold ribbon, which follows the line of the skirt drapery. The upper part of the waist and sleeves are of unlined chiffon, and the underskirt is of chiffon and crystal fringe. A girdle of dull blue ribbon velvet is caught to one side in the back by a large rhinestone buckle, and falls in long ends.

MIDDLE FIGURE.—Draped evening coat and band at the bottom, embroidered in heavy dull reds.

RIGHT FIGURE.—Afternoon gown in purple brocaded crêpe de Chine, showing a well-defined waist-line. The kimono waist, basque and long skirt revers are of Milano lace, and the undersleeve of purple chiffon is finished at the elbow with a gathered ruffle.

HERE is no subject in the world more interesting than that of feminine beauty. How many efforts have been attempted in vain, until our day, to develop the divine art of being beautiful? Science has at last taught women to go to the root of all blemishes in order to eradicate them and make the skin bright, healthy and youthful.

All society women and those who travel abroad have heard of the scientific treatment of the celebrated Parisian Dr. Dys, and are using his methods with marvelous success. Dr. Dys'

are composed of flowers and vegetable substances especially adapted to give freshness to the complexion. They turn the ablution water into a vegetable milk, which stimulates the skin and gives the face a natural brightness. The Sachets are made up to suit the age and complexion of every woman. Following are a few:

SACHETS SUPRA, Dr. Dys' latest discovery, produces a milk which hardens the muscles and keeps them in perfect condition during repose, so that the face looks young and fresh on awakening. Box of 40; $5.50; by mail, $5.80. SACHETS DE TOILETTE take the hardness out of water, prevent the skin from being tamed and burned, softening it and giving it a natural freshness. Box of 25, $1.00; by mail, $1.15.

SACHETS DE JEUNESSE, for delicate and fair skins; give freshness to the complexion and prevent wrinkles. Box of 60, $3.75; by mail, $4.00.

SACHETS A L'AUBEPINE, for Brunettes, impart velvety smoothness to the skin, prevent wrinkles. Box of 50, $3.75; by mail, $4.00.

SACHETS CONCENTRES, for shiny or oily skins, pimples, blackheads or acne. Box of 50, $3.75; by mail, $4.00.

SACHETS DE FRAICHEUR prevent dryness of skin, soften and whiten it, making wrinkles disappear. Box of 50, $5.00; by mail, $5.25.

MAIL ORDERS FOR THE ABOVE PROMPTLY FILLED

The Sachets are sent with full directions for use on receipt of check or money order. They can only be obtained from V. DARSY, who is Dr. Dys' sole preparer and agent. Dr. Dys' other preparations are fully described in his fascinating 62-page book,

HEALTH THE FOUNDATION OF REAL

The wrinkled, sallow complexion, the haggard, tired appearance of the woman whose social or domestic duties are exacting, will, after a while, fail to respond to even the best remedial facial treatments. A daily course in hy-giene, which includes dieting and moderate exercising is necessary to restore a run-down system to normal health, without which real beauty is impossible. Hulda Thomas'

Course in Dieting and Exercising is devised for the woman whose time is limited, requiring but a few minutes daily. Her simple rules on hygiene, the result of fifteen years of close study, will make a tremendous improvement in your health and vitality in a comparatively short time. She will be glad to mail you full information concerning the Course if you cannot call in person.

THE SWEET SANDWICH

Among the sandwiches for any occasion, one of nuts—English walnuts, pecans, peanuts, almonds, or hickory nuts —is generally liked. Chop very fine, add to each cup of nuts two tablespoonfuls of mayonnaise, and spread on buttered bread.

A delicious sweet sandwich is of bananas, which have been marinated in marischino or rum. Marischino cherries, chopped in not too small pieces, to which have been added nut meats chopped fine —a quarter of a cup of the latter added to half a cup of cherries—are good spread on buttered bread. Nuts may be added to any jam or jelly sandwich.

Orange honey, for sweet sandwiches, is made in the following manner: Boil together, until the syrup will "thread," one cup of sugar, a quarter of a cup of orange juice and a quarter of a cup of water, then add half a cup of orange

The Simplest Gown looks well on a Figure of Correct Proportion if Carried Well.

You Can Weigh Exactly what You Should Weigh

My pupils are among the most refined, intellectual women of America. They have regained health and good figures and learned how to keep well. Each has given me a few minutes a day in the privacy of her own room to following scientific, hygienic principles of health, prescribed to suit each individual's needs.

No Drugs-No Medicines

My work has grown in favor because results are quick, natural and permanent and because they are scientific and appeal to common sense.

Be Well—nothing short of well.

Radiate Health so that every one with whom you come in contact is permeated with your strong spirit, your wholesome personality -- feels better in body and mind for your very presence.

Be Attractive—well groomed.

Improve Your Figure—in other words, be at your best. You wield a stronger influence for good, for education, for wholesome. right living, if you are attractive and well, graceful and well poisedupright in body as well as in mind—and you are happier.

I want to help every woman to realize that her health lies, to a degree, in her own hands, and that she can reach her ideal in figure and poise.

Judge what I can do for you by what I have done for others.

I think I do not exaggerate when I say I have corrected more Chronic Ailments and built up and reduced more women during the past nine years than any ten physicians—the best physicians are my friends—their wives and daughters are my pupils.

I have Reduced about 25,000 women from 10 to 85 lbs. I have rounded out and Increased the Weight of as many more—all this by strengthening nerves, heart, circulation, lungs and vital organs so as to regulate the assimilation of food.

Won't you join us?—we will make you and the whole world better. I have published a free booklet showing how to stand and walk correctly, and giving other information of vital interest to women. Write for it and I will also tell you about my work. If you are perfectly well and your figure is just what you wish, you may be able to help a dear friend-at least you will help me by your interest in this great movement of health and figure through natural means.

Sit down and write to me NOW. Don't Wait-you may forget it. I have had a wonderful experience, and I should like to tell you about it.

Miss Cocroft's name stands for progress in the scientific care of the health and figure of women.

The fashion of sealing letters seems once more to be coming to the front, though as a matter of fact it has always been in use in France, and therefore it is quite natural that from Paris should come all the latest fancies for perpetuating this pretty old-time custom. The sketch at the top of this page shows an entire set in silver for use in sealing and stamping letters. Upon a small silver tray about three inches square are little fixtures which hold in place the miniature chafing dish in silver in which the wax is melted, the small silver funnel through which when melted it may be neatly poured upon the paper, a silver stamp, a piece of silver-mounted corrugated iron upon which to scratch the matches, and last and best of all, instead of the old sticks of wax, small tablets about the size of a five-cent piece, containing just the right amount for a single seal to be dropped into the

The scarf is an absolute square, cut from the edge to the middle at one side, forming the front opening and the little pointed neck. The four corners of the square fall in long points on either side of the front and back, to which gold tassels are fastened. Price, 55 francs.

THE EVER-VARYING NÉGLIGÉE

The négligée is a garment that offers unlimited possibilities in designing, the one illustrated on the left hand being the latest product of a French house that specializes in lingerie and robes intimes. This particular model is a delightful combination of black and gold net, white shadow lace and pale pink chiffon. The entire underslip is of the chiffon veiled by the lace, which in turn is covered by the scantily fulled tunic of coarse-meshed black and gold net. The tunic is cut down in front in a deep V showing the underslip of white lace, and has the effect of a deep pointed vest. A narrow rolling collar of hemstitched pink chiffon extends in long revers down either side of the V and roses of the same chiffon trim the front.

Rhinestone barrettes are favorite choice for evening wear

The lattice work design still retains its popularity

short kimono bodice is held in snugly at the waist by three rows of shirring, from which the skirt hangs in clinging lines to the top of the under hem, and is finished by a turnback facing of pink satin, outlined in chiffon roses.

NEW RHINESTONE BARRETTES

Whether the hair is worn low on the neck, arranged high on the head or in whatever way fancy or fashion dictates, the barrette is indispensable, and for evening wear nothing is more appropriate than those in silver and rhinestones, which fill the windows of the various artificial jewelry shops. Good rhinestone ornaments are never inexpensive. but the barrette shown on the left at the top of this page and priced at 18 francs is one of the best values for the money to be found. It is about one inch wide and about two and a half inches long, with slightly curved sides to allow it to fit closely to the head. The stones which are quite brilliant are set in nickel plate, in a delicate wreath design, framed by another band of larger single stones. The next sketch shows a barrette in the lattice work design, with tiny rhinestones at the intersection of each square. This barrette is considerably larger, being about three inches long and is mounted in heavy silver gilt, so that the price, 35 francs, is exceedingly low. To the right is one about three and a half inches long, in the parallel line design which Paris is now affecting. The stones, which are large and very brilliant, are set in heavy platinum-finished silver, and the price of it is 50 francs.

HAND-EMBROIDERED VEILS

Veils are a very important item of the French woman's toilette, for she realizes to the full the charm imparted to a mediocre skin by a finely woven covering, so to the choosing of it she devotes much time, thought and money. The lower right illustration on this page shows a square three-inch ruche of the silk, corded on mesh veil of fine black silk threads, with the edge. It costs 45 francs, but it a wide hand-embroidered border of could be made at home for the price large black silk flowers. The veil of the material by the yard.

measures about a yard and a half in length and over half a yard in width, so that it may be worn with the largest and roundest of hats. Price, 35 francs. A shadow lace veil with a narrow embroidered border costs 15 francs.

FOR THE SMOKER

Everything which can make for the convenience and comfort of the smoker seems now to be invented, and the stick seen in the middle sketch is amongst the most original of these devices. The crook handle opens by means of invisible hinges, disclosing a box long and deep enough to hold six or more ordinary sized cigarettes, and the straight part of the handle, which is joined to the stick, contains a box for matches. The handle is of plain bright silver or nickel plate, the workmanship good and the wood polished. Price, with solid silver handle, 60 francs.

The cigar and cigarette box shown below is made of light colored, highly polished olive wood, and is lined with green morocco leather. When shut it measures about a foot long by four inches wide. It is but two inches in depth, and as it holds over five dozen cigarettes and a dozen or more cigars, it is certainly a most compact affair for a man to take with him on an automobile trip. Price, 90 francs.

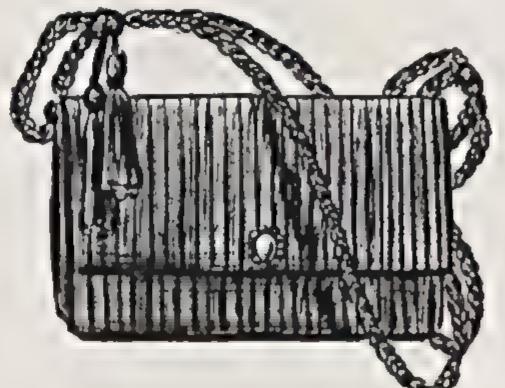

BAGS FOR DAY AND EVENING

The plain cordelière bag, in envelope shape, such as seen at the bottom of the page, is being shown by the smart stores as appropriate for shopping and general use with the tailor-made. This particular one is of heavy gray velvet, striped with hair-lines of black, and is about seven inches long, fastening with an elaborate clasp of enamel and rhinestones.

Price, 65 francs. An opera bag of accordion - plaited liberty satin is gathered onto a stiff, round cardboard; a heavy silk cord of the same shade is run through the top,

HUPP-YEATS ELECTRIC COACH

TN the "Imperial" and "Royal" Limdousines and the "DeLuxe" Coupe we have produced what competent judges declare to be the most beautiful pleasure vehicles ever built.

They embody, of course, the exclusive, safe, lowhung, Hupp-Yeats construction—a design which is rapidly putting the old-fashioned high-body electrics in the same class as the high bicycle of a generation ago.

We could not improve the construction ideas. But we searched the world for appointments rich enough to be worthy of these new models. The most exquisite tapestries and laces; the most delicate upholstery; the daintiest glass and metal ware that could be found. The search took months; but the result is a creation of luxury, refinement and good taste that has never been equalled in coach building.

The Imperial and Royal Limousines are 5-passenger fore-door cars. All passengers face forward, and the car can be divided into two sections if desired. Imperial, $5000. Royal, $4500.

The DeLuxe is to 4-passenger coaches what the other models are to limousines. All metal body parts and trimmings on these models are gold plated.

By reason of the exclusive low-hung design, all Hupp-Yeats Coaches are exceptionally easy to handle. Even the massive limousines may be driven by a young girl.

Other Hupp-Yeats models: Patrician Coupe, $3000; Regina Coupe, $2500; Regent Coupe, $1750.

uses and recommends "delicious"

MISS FARRAR WRITES:

I am very glad to express my complete satisfaction with the delicious CREME NEROL made by Forrest D. Pullen. It has, my hearty and sincere recommendation.

The distinguishing qualities of Créme Nerol, aside from its rare excellence as a beautifier of the complexion, are its absolute FRESHNESS and freedom from Preservatives.

Not a drop of preservative enters into the making of this wonderfully efficacious cream, as CRÉME NEROL is NOT made to sell in drug and department stores. Each and every order is filled with delightful, freshly made cream and mailed direct to the user.

CRÉME NEROL softens, whitens, refines and beautifies the most sallow, rough or impaired complexion, and as a cleanser of those minute safety valves of the skin (the pores) it is unequalled. It most positively will not promote a growth of hair.

Its tonic effect upon the relaxed facial muscles and the attendant flabby condition (the cause of all lines and wrinkles) is most pronounced.

What Créme Nerol has done for others it will do for you.

Prison Association of New was fairly upon its feet once more. York was incorporated under objects of the Association shall be: 1— The amelioration of the conditions of prisoners, whether detained for trial or finally convicted or held as witnesses. 2—The improvement of the prison discipline and the improvement of the prisons, whether in cities, countries or states. 3—The support and encouragement of reformed convicts after their discharge, by affording them the means of obtaining an honest livelihood and sustaining them in their efforts at reform."

How fundamental as well as far-reaching its work is may be deduced from the recommendations made to the State Legislature a year ago, which urged: 1-A reformatory for young misdemeanants. 2-A farm and industrial colony for the detention, education and reformation of habitual tramps and vagrants. 3—One or more hospitals and farm colonies for the treatment of inebriates. 4—Finally, prohelped by present prison or reformatory limit fifty paroled prisoners to each

His tentiary and the workhouse in order to necessities provided for, he is promptly put in the way of getting work and also urged to look for it himself. After the ex-convict is installed in a position, he is not abandoned by the Association, but receives constant encouragement to continue his reform.

Potent help is rendered by a group of business and professional men, who visit the ex-convicts at their work, and show them that they have a sincere interest in their getting on. The ex-convicts are asked to visit the "Big Brother," and are made to feel that they have real friends. This personal contact is of immense value in developing self-respect and ambition in the man who would dom of sixty-seven years of continuous probably otherwise continue to the end of his days to be a pariah.

Grave responsibility is assumed by the Association in paroling ex-convicts, for it is held to account for their good conduct. The chief parole agent is Mr. Henry B. The chief parole agent attends the meetings of the state prisons and boards of parole as the representative of the Prison Association, so that the ex-prisoners may be brought immediately into touch with the helpfulness of the Prison Association. Reproduces You or Any One with Looking-Glass Fidelity

By simply inflating Pneu Form inside the fitted waist lining of the person for whom the waist or dress is to be made, the desired form, faithful in every detail, is reproduced with the exactness of Nature. Dressmakers prefer to fit over Pneu Form because it always stands still, is always ready and never gets cross or out of sorts.

The Standard Rod Can Be Regulated to Any Height For Draping Skirts

Any woman who makes her own waists or dresses, or waists and dresses for others, will find in Pneu Form a constant comfort and convenience. Or any woman who has her gowns made by a Modiste will find the Pneu Form a happy relief from the vexing and wearisome task of standing hour after hour for fittings.

REMODELING FROM VOGUE PATTERNS

The Possibilities of a Single Pattern Which Is Often Capable of Infinite Variation

ERHAPS just as frequently as one turns the pages of a fashion book to find some suggestion for a new gown or suit, one searches for some model which will serve as the basis for remodeling an old garment; and this, because of the limitations of material and cut of the gown to be remodeled, is even more difficult to find. Besides, many women, not having the trained, all-seeing eye of a fashion artist, do not observe the possibilities in a sketch, its essential adaptability to the old gown, though the details seem impossible of adaptation. It is not at all necessary, in order to achieve the chic of a gown pictured and de- pendant on the draped revers would be

A passé gown of jetted net might be used, eliminating the worn parts, as the tunic of a gown over a new underdress or one detached from a second old gown; striped black and orange chiffon over a white silk slip would make a charming underdress. The pattern by which to cut the gown is No. 1829, and the variations which might be introduced are suggested in the second small drawing from the left at the bottom of this page. The high crush girdle might be of black messaline or charmeuse, the corsage decoration a hand-made rose of black velvet with a heart of gold tissue, the scribed, to use the materials and follow the exact cut described. One may change these radically and yet preserve the essential mode of the gown. This article suggests ways of remodeling or freshening up an old gown, using as a basis some of the patterns previously shown in these columns, and at the same time recommends possible alternatives by which one may vary from the models and stamp them with one's own individuality.

of black velvet with heavy strands of gold thread linking the various sized balls. The overdress to this frock would be quite as effective of plain or dotted net with a narrow fringe of silk or jet as trimming.

AGE AND THE CHIN

The shapeless, disfiguring double chin, or the "set," drawn chin of one who has worried make a young woman appear middle aged, a mature woman positively old. On the other hand, a youthful, rounded chin keeps a woman young looking whatever her age may be. Any woman can look years younger by using

(Patent Nov. 15, 1910)

It positively eradicates the most pronounced double chin. and eliminates the drawn, scraggy appearance of a thin neck and throat by its wonderful stimulation of blood circulation. Merely pull the cords gently and alternately, and the "ivory tinted" rollers revolve against the tissues, creating the perfect massage, making the flesh firm and restoring the true contour to chin and neck. Use the machine five minutes on arising in the morning and on retiring at night to get the best results. If you have not a double chin, but are prone to stoutness, you will find Prof. Mack's machine a reliable preventive.

the addition of a few little frills it would many small pieces, it would lend itself admirably to the remaking of an old gown. The lace overwaist would hide the piecing of the underblouse. Pale blue crêpe de Chine with a blouse of creamy lace would be pretty; narrow cream lace, finely plaited, edges the tiers of the skirt, the bottom of the peplum blouse, the collar and cuffs. A black tulle sash knotted with a hanging end and a flat, demure little bow and short end of the tulle beneath the broad crêpe de Chine collar give the right accent. These tulle trimmings, being only two layers thick, are not dead black or heavy looking, but give a hint of the delicate color beneath. A simple, effective finish might be given to the edges of the skirt or of a contrasting color to match the sections, the collar and blouse, by collar bow and narrow belt. This little French knots worked with black.

GOWN OF CONTRASTING MATERIALS

The one-piece costume shown in No. 1792, page 74, has the advantage of the underarm gusset, which allows perfect freedom of movement. This gown made up in cream serge and striped black and white satin would be very serviceable in the early spring days when one dispenses with the heavy wrap and finds a muff and boa protection enough. Among its many advantages this model counts the convenient side-front-opening and the box-plait at the back, which gives an unbroken line and a hint of fullness, which is greatly appreciated by many women who find very trying the extreme skirt with no lines to break the expanse of the back breadth. The skirt is slashed at the front to reveal an inset of the contrasting material, which also forms a triangular vest just above the waist-line, and forms the narrow cuffs. The upper edge of the lace collar is bound with a narrow, crosswise fold of the satin, as is also the lapping front edge of the blouse. The black bone buttons which close the front are sewed in place with heavy white twist to carry out the black and white motif. The large buttonholes, which are really a trimming, are but with the use of a light material and also bound with the satin; or one may simulate the holes with a crosswise told be a sufficiently dainty gown for any of the trimming, a much more simple but the most formal wear. Being in so method and quite as effective as the more tailored holes. The black satin sasn ends in a black and white bead fringe.

WHEN MATERIAL RUNS SHORT

The gown shown in No. 1934, page 74, might be developed in soft silks, plain' and figured, for an afternoon frock. The girlish blouse of figured material is stitched to the plain vest and underarm section, and is finished with a narrow peplum rounded at the sides. The three-quarter sleeve, which may be lengthened to the wrist, has a hint of fullness at the elbow, one of the new features of the spring fashions. The small buttons which adorn the tiny vest and narrow skirt panel may be of silk frock would also make up attractively in plain and figured challie, a combination of silk and lace, or in linen and allover lace or embroidery. If the gown be of white or a delicate color, the mode of trimming with tiny black pearl buttons sewn through and through with white thread is effective, or, to vary the effect, the buttons may be made to appear to be striped by quartering them with thread before sewing them on. On a veiled black and white chiffon blouse tiny buttons of either black or white, posed close in line, and sewed through and over, would be a novel trimming.

sequence cut scantily, is fitted carefully at the top, and finished at the bottom the lower garter, thus continuing the with a four-inch bias band. This excellent utility model, measuring two vards at the bottom, is designed in navy, wistaria, black, white and all the evening shades, and is very reasonably priced at $5.75.

HONI SOIT QUI MAL Y PENSE

So runs the motto of the most ancient Order of the Garter, brought into glorious existence in the thirteenth century by a nobleman's simple, chivalrous defense of the Duchess of Salisbury's embarrassment on her losing her garter at a dance. Twentieth-century ingenuity has placed such a mishap beyond possibility by the invention of a pair of gar-time are warranted not to rip the thinnest of hosiery. This device works in conjunction with the usual hose supporter. It consists of two velvet bands joined by elastic webbing, one of which is worn above, the other below the knee. The hose supporters attached to the corset fasten in metal a determination to cling. It is in con- eyes at the top of the upper garter, at which points elastic bands join it to hold of the supporter to this second band. This device prevents the stocking from twisting about on the leg, and hence of undergoing undue strain from the supporter. These smart novelties come in black or white at 50 cents, and in light blue, pink or tan at $1 and $1.50.

GOOD PAJAMA MODELS

The trousered grace of the Oriental maid is rivaled in the boudoir négligée and robe de nuit of the up-to-date daughter of the Occident. Very attractive are the pajamas designed for feminine wear which are being shown by a well-known house. The straight jacket with three-quarter sleeves and side ters that cannot slip and at the same pocket fastens with silk frogs in the regulation Japanese style, and the well-fitting trousers are untrimmed. This model comes in pink, blue, violet or tan soisette at $5.75. The same model is shown in a summery style in white, dotted silk mull with floral designs in pink, blue, violet and yellow, also priced at $5.75.

DRESS PATTERNS

How to Select and Buy Them

> HE most expensive dress pattern is the pattern that can only be developed into an ill-fitting, unstylish gown.

It is never safe to experiment with the low-priced patterns offered everywhere. These patterns are produced literally by the million. Even if you succeed in making a successful gown from one of these patterns, you are apt to see a dozen others exactly like it before you have worn it a dozen times.

Vogue Patterns, on the other hand, are made in limited numbers. And as they are designed after the latest models from the great designers of Paris, they represent the styles of to-morrow, not of to-day. A gown made from a Vogue Pattern will not merely be in the height of the mode when you make it-it will still be in style long after gowns made from other patterns have gone hopelessly out of the fashion.

You will find little trouble in fitting a dress made from a Vogue Pattern. The Pattern itself was designed and cut with a view to the individual wearer—not merely stamped out by machinery, And as each pattern is cut in three colors you can easily distinguish between material, lining and trimming. This idea seems obviously simple—but where else can you find it? It is only another of those immensely important little things that combine to make up the superiority of Vogue Patterns.

On page 42 you will find four new pattern designs. Perhaps one of them will be the very thing you have been looking for. Every one represents the latest development of its particular type, and may safely be recommended to discerning American taste.

When ordering a Vogue Pattern, be sure to give your size, and to specify the number of the desired pattern, and the date of the issue in which it appeared. Enclose the appropriate remittance and the pattern will be received by return post. The price of each pattern is printed at the foot of the description that accompanies the sketch. We are speaking in this article only of our ready-cut patterns. If you wish to know about our cutto-measure patterns, which is a special department, write Vogue for full particulars.

CLEVER FURNISHINGS

appearance of layers of tables, a cover fashion of camp-stool legs. A silk work thrown over them disguises the fact of bag is shirred to the inside of the frame, there being more than one.

page 26 that, when closed, is two and one-half feet long by six inches wide. There are two shelves, each with a twelve-inch drop leaf on either side; so that when open there are two shelves of two and one-half feet each. When not in use this makes a pretty little stand for a jardinière or book-rack. Price, in mahogany, from $27 up.

There are all sizes and shapes of tilttop tables which, when not serving in one of their many capacities as card, sewing, tea tables or to hold a book or glass by the easy chair, may be pushed flat against the wall. One of these tables is shown in the upper photograph on page 26.

CARD TABLE AND MUSIC BENCH

Another card table, no longer a novelty, but so clever a space-saving device as to be worth mentioning, is the round or square table beneath which fit four low-backed chairs; their backs form the rim of the table and their legs appear to be the legs of the table. Price, $27. This table is shown with a lamp in the picture, page 26.

A piano-bench music-cabinet looks like the usual long, mahogany bench, but the inside of the top is fitted with dozens of compartments for sheet and book music, to reach which one has only to tip up the top. Price, $20.

FOR THE NARROW HALL

An indispensable adjunct of the small hall or library is the console, which will also serve the purpose of a large general utility or card table. In shape it is always a variation of the oblong or semicircle, for the back line must be straight to fit flat against the wall beneath the console mirror. An upper leaf fits close over the table top and may be folded back to double the size of the console.

Another old space-saver is the telephone table with the low chair or stool which slides out of view beneath it. A variation in the direction of economy of room is the triangular table and stool which fit into a corner. Price, $3.20 or $5.25.

DEVICES FOR THE BOUDOIR

In the boudoir, too, there are many ways of saving space, of making one article do the work of two, while occupying less than the space of one. A little work table is made with two leaves that open out from a central leaf, like the tea table described before. It is twice as long open as closed, and so may be used as a cutting board. It comes in a pretty, mahogany inlay design with two drawers conveniently divided into compartments. Price, $30.

A pretty little device that takes up even less room than this work table is the two-fold "sewing screen." It is made of delicately flowered cretonne shirred on two panel frames, each two feet high by one foot wide; being a screen, it can be folded flat against the wall. The inside is fitted with all manner of little cretonne pockets, completely supplied with all a needlewoman's necessities. But the best feature is the little board flap which, supported by a tape attached to the frame, can be pulled out to form a table. Price, $2.65.

CAMP STOOL SEWING TABLE

One of the prettiest and most convenient of sewing tables consists of a square frame about two inches wide supported by legs that close up after the

which is hinged in the middle and has A drop-leaf tea table is illustrated on two handles that come together for one hand grip, when the table is closed up. The frame serves to hold scissors, cushion, thimble and all sewing accessories. This table has the advantage over the others that one can leave the work in it when it is not in use. Price, $13.

A variation of this style of sewing table shows across the top, over the sewing bag, a reversible mahogany cover; when one side of this cover is up, it forms a little writing desk fitted with all desk accessories, when it is reversed we have a pretty mahogany table.

BREAKFAST TABLE FOR THE BOUDOIR

If one is living in an apartment house where meals are served in the separate apartments from a common base of supplies, or in an apartment hotel and having little breakfasts and luncheons served in one's apartment, nothing could be more convenient than the small, collapsible breakfast tables which, when not in use, can be slipped into a closet or against the wall. Being as high as an ordinary dining table, they are perfectly comfortable to use. They are from thirty-six to forty-two inches long and only eight inches wide; a long leaf falls down on either side of the narrow, center board and is held out by extra, adjustable legs. It will comfortably accommodate four people. Some of these little breakfast tables have a drawer in one end, into which may be slipped the table cloth, napkins and silver. These are sold for anywhere from $12 to $30.

A "WARDROBE SCREEN"

A great convenience in a boudoir where closet room is limited is the "wardrobe screen." One may examine it quite carefully and see no good reason why it should be set apart, by a name, from other screens. But there is really something in this name. The usual grillwork at the top is, in this case, a series of little pegs, each of which may be pulled into a position at right angles to the screen and used for holding clothes. Placed in a recess or corner, it keeps the clothes from view. Or if one prefers not to use it during the day, it is a convenient place to hang the clothes at night. Price, $5.95.

AN "AUTO-VALET" FOR MONSIEUR

Perhaps the most compact, complete, leaving-nothing-to-be-desired article of space economy is the "auto-valet," alias "bachelor's wardrobe." With this wardrobe before him there could be no possible need for an intermediary between man and his complete equipment. It stands about five and one-half feet high, is of mahogany and has two full-length doors in front. Monsieur pulls open the doors and out spring his clothes—twelve suits can be accommodated. This device works automatically on the opening of the doors. The suits are suspended from steel hangers.

But this is not the best of it. Everything the heart of man could desire is provided for in this wardrobe; at the bottom is a box for his shoes, in the upper right-hand corner, shallow drawers for handkerchiefs, below them deeper drawers for underwear, others for stiffbosomed shirts, a deep one at the bottom for his hats; little divided drawers for jewelry and trinkets, rolling rods for his ties, a strap for his clothes brush, an adjustable shaving glass, a tube for umbrellas and cane—a place for everything, so that nothing could ever be out of place, and plenty of room for all. Price, $45.

This 45 Horse Power Touring Car—$1500

Equipped with Self-Starter, Only $20 Extra

HERE are more Overlands being bought to-day than any other similar car in the world. This great success must be due to the fact that we are giving more car for less money than any other maker in the business. Our factory is the largest and most complete in the industry. Our enormous facilities make possible a method of economical production which the smaller plants cannot touch.

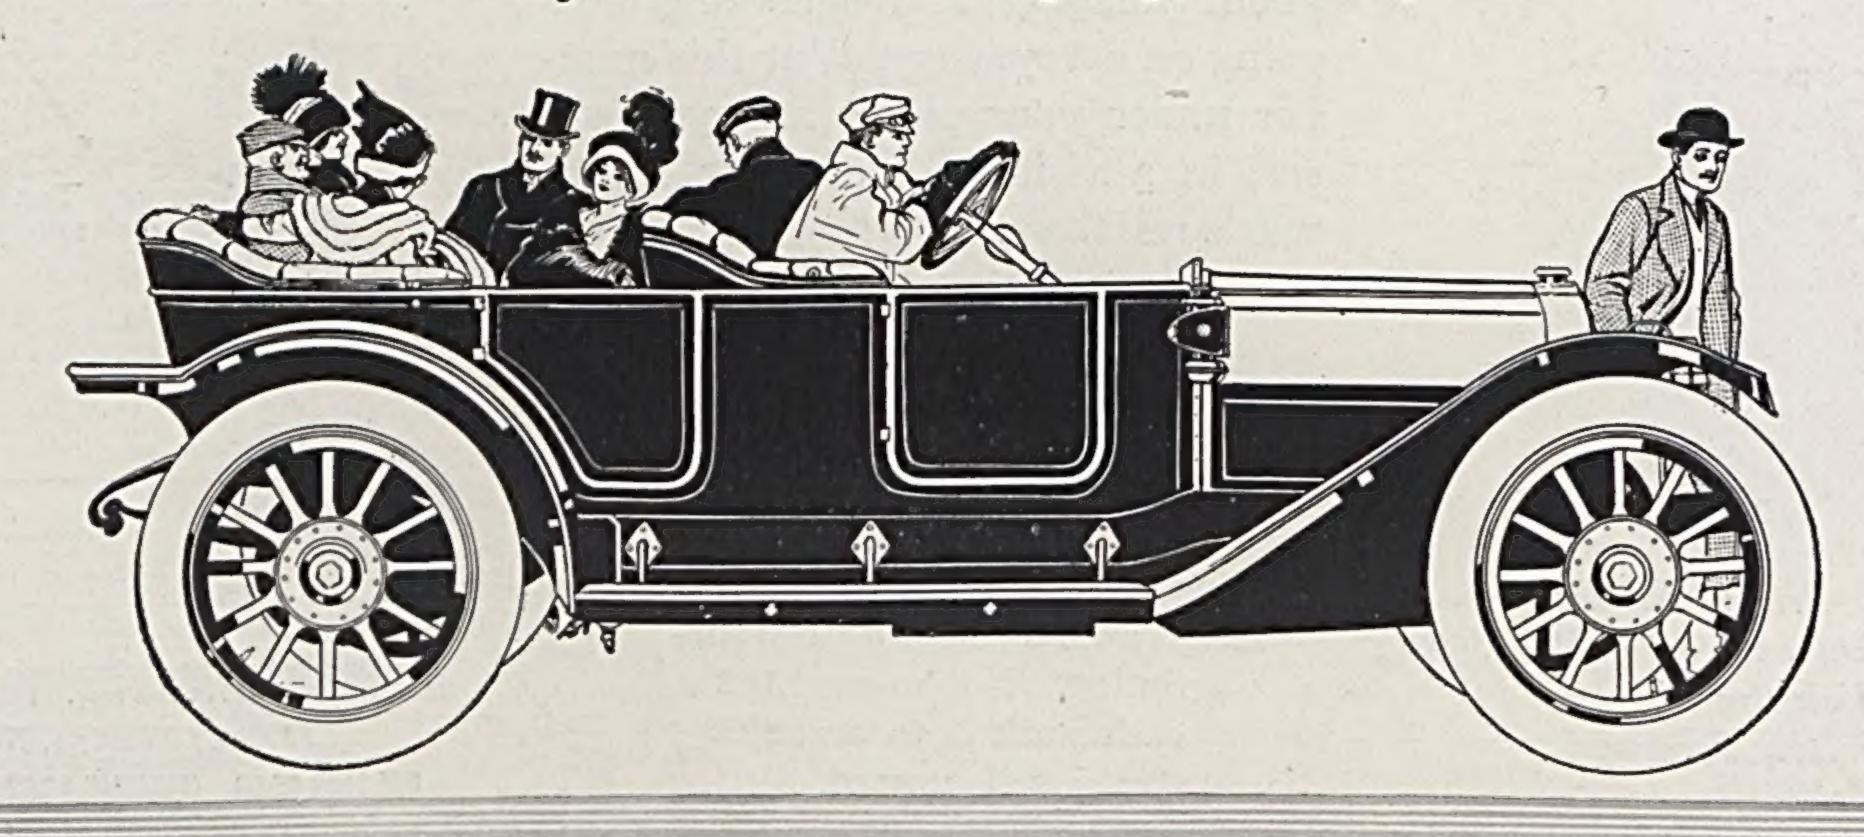

This car is our Model 61. It is a 45 horse power, five-passenger touring car—priced at $1500. A survey of the specifications will actually show you the average $2000 value.

The wheel base is 115 inches. The selective transmission is fitted with F & S bearings which are used on the most expensive cars made. The axles are fitted with the finest Timken bearings. The frame is of pressed steel with a double drop. The magneto is a Bosch. The body is finished in rich Brewster green, ivory striped. All the bright parts are nickel-plated. The lamps are dead black, trimmed with heavy nickel. The tires are big. The upholstery is of the finest leather, hand stuffed with real hair.

If you wish, we will equip this car with a Self-Starting System for only $20 additional. Our system we believe to be the simplest, safest and most economical starter made. Always works, and a child can work it.

An investigation will prove that this car for $1500 is, at least, the equal, speaking very conservatively, of most of the $2000 cars now on the market. Write for one of our big 1912 books, which gives you its detailed value. Please ask for book A.
